Editor: Keiron Richards

Nationalism Today is the radical voice of British Nationalism. It is printed, published and distributed by the N.T. Press. Editorially it supports the National Front.

Unless specifically stated to the contrary, the views expressed in signed articles or letters are solely the responsibility of their authors and do not represent the views of the Editor, N.T. or the National Front.

The appearance of any advertisement in Nationalism Today is not necessarily indicative that the Editor has any knowledge of, or interest in, or support for the product, service, organisation or function advertised.

The Editor is pleased to receive manuscripts of articles from readers for possible publication. These should be typed in double-spacing and normally be no longer than 1,250 words. No payment is made for articles published - which become N.T. copyright unless authors specifically request otherwise at the time they submit their manuscripts. The Editor reserves the right to shorten or otherwise amend articles accepted for publication should shortage of space or editorial judgement require such alterations to be made.

Those wishing to reprint articles from Nationalism Today are welcome to do so, provided that they include with the reprinted article the author's name, and the name and address of Nationalism Today.

Ulster Must Fight

IF PREDICTING the future is generally difficult, predicting future events in Ulster is usually virtually impossible. Yet there can be little doubt that 1986 will be a momentous year for Ulster: threatened by Dublin aggression and Westminster betrayal, Ulster has a simple choice – fight back or die.

There are a small (fortunately very small!) number of pessimists in the British Nationalist movement who argue that Ulster faces the same destructive pressures that Rhodesia faced; consequently they argue that if the National Front cries "Save Ulster" as once it cried "Save Rhodesia" we will once again be left supporting a lost cause, should Ulster fail.

Such people are wrong to doubt the Party for its commitment to the Loyalist cause, very wrong. They are wrong in principle, because the National Front does not betray a just cause, simply because there is no easy, guaranteed victory. They are also wrong in practice, because Ulster is going to win its battle for existence.

White Rhodesia fell because it was too effete, bourgeois and materialist – when the prospects of a comfortable lifestyle vanished so did White Rhodesia's will to survive. Ulster is different: ordinary working-class Loyalists, who will form the backbone of resistance to Thatcher's sell-out plans, have never had a soft life. Their determination to maintain Ulster's freedom and independence from the Republic of Ireland has been deepened and hardened by twenty years of Republican terrorism.

DIFFERENCE

There is another difference between Ulster and Rhodesia. When Rhodesia fell the NF could only impotently spectate. In the coming conflict in Ulster there is a real chance that the NF can play a constructive political role, to the mutual benefit of the Loyalist cause, and the Party itself.

In view of the importance of current events in Ulster Nationalism Today is devoting the centre pages of this issue to the subject. Belfast-based journalist David Kerr gives his analysis of the causes of the present unrest on page 12, whilst on page 13 NF Deputy Chairman, Nick Griffin, explains why the NF supports the idea of 'UDI' for Ulster, and also outlines the steps the NF can take to help the Loyalist cause.

As readers will appreciate the coming months are likely to be crucial – if the people of Ulster can throw off the shackles of the corrupt Westminster State then the repercussions will be felt, not just throughout Britain, but throughout Europe. That is why the National Front must do all in its power to help the Loyalist cause.

THE FORGOTTEN FOLK

BRITAIN'S four television channels spend a fairly substantial amount of broadcasting time on musical programmes. Just about every conceivable taste is catered to – from opera and classical music to the most mindless syncopations of commercial pop. Over-hyped non-entities like Wham! and Duran Duran seemed at one time to never be off our screens.

Both BBC and the commercial stations did, of course, ensure that "minority" music got plenty of coverage. Negro syncopations and Asian wailings – it seemed that there was no minority, however small, that did not have at least a few programmes broadcast of its music.

There was however one area of music that was usually totally ignored by British television, one "ethnic grouping" considered unworthy of attention. Yes, you've guessed it – British folk music hardly got a look in on TV last year, and 1986 will be just as bad.

EIGHT HOURS

In 1985 ITV had only eight hours of nationally-networked programmes on folk music, yet that put them way ahead of the "British" Broadcasting Corporation, who devoted virtually no time at all, on either BBC1 or BBC2, to British folk music. Channel 4's main contribution to folk music – a documentary on the Shepherds of Bernery – was degradingly classed with Bangladeshi and West Indian programmes, by being described as an "ethnic" music programme.

It does not seem that 1986 will see the recognition of folk by the TV authorities as the musical expression of the cultural heritage of the British people. For example, Granada's lengthy series "Man and Music" for Channel 4 succeeded in ignoring all European traditional music.

FAIRNESS

In fairness to the broadcasting authorities it has to be admitted that S.T.V., BBC Scotland and S4C have broadcast a comparatively large number of programmes in their areas on Scottish and Welsh folk music. Although this is partly a reflection of the stronger traditions of cultural awareness in Scotland and Wales there may be other reasons why England is particularly neglected.

Scotland and Wales have not suffered as badly as England from coloured immigration: the Establishment's need to destroy the sense of national and cultural identity among the Scottish and Welsh people is consequently a lot less urgent.

George Michael and Andrew Ridgeley – their bland anodyne "music" is typical of the BBC's idea of British music.

Sikh Terror on our Streets

ON JANUARY 23rd Mr. Tarsem Singh Toor, aged 54, general secretary of the Indian Workers Association, was shot in the head in his shop. He died later that night in hospital. He was an outspoken supporter of the Indian Government and was thus a target for Sikh extremists, who are campaigning for an independant state – Kalistan – which would cover most of what is now called the Punjab. Although the motive for the killing was almost certain to have been political, Detective Superintendent Guy Mills, of the Police's Anti-terrorist Branch told reporters that the killing could have been the result of "drugs, smuggling, or a robbery that went wrong". Which doesn't say much for the Sikh community if they could be guilty of any of those crimes.

Mr. Toor is not the only Sikh to suffer in Britain from his fellow countrymen. A week before his death, a prominent member of the moderate "Akali Dal Party, Mr Sangatar Singh Sandhu, was also shot in the head in Heathrow Airport. In Luton last November, a member of the local branch of Ghandi's Congress party was shot and paralysed. In both Southall and Derby pitch battles have been fought between different Sikh factions.

Far from cracking down on this terror the authorities have done nothing. Not one person has been arrested for these crimes; in fact the Home Office is encouraging terrorists to come here. It is now considering a plea for political asylum from a prominent Sikh terrorist, Jaswant Singh Thekedar, who is wanted on eight charges by the Indian police. Thekedar came to Britain in 1982 with his wife and children. Ealing council classified them as homeless, gave them a council flat, where they now receive £74 a week social security. Terrorism on your rates!

Due to there being a massive – 300,000 and growing – number of Sikhs in Britain any conflict amongst them will bring disaster and mass murder to our streets. All foreign political agitators should be deported immediately – let them settle their own quarrels in their own lands!

Armed Sikh militants – becoming an all too common sight of our streets.

BRITAIN'S ENEMIES UNITE

THE LEVEL of co-operation between the Marxist IRA and Britain's Immigrants has been well documented by the National Front. These links go back a long way, but really came to light in 1981.

This was when leading Black Power activist, Darcus Howe, told a meeting in support of the murdering IRA hunger striker Bobby Sands, that "the overwhelming majority" of Blacks in Britain supported the IRA.

He went on: "Speaking as a West Indian, I will tell you what the attitude of the overwhelming majority of my people to Northern Ireland is: there is a tremendous sympathy founded in hard political support."

In 1982, Gerry Adams and other Sinn Fein/IRA members travelled to London. He met Blacks in Brixton, and invited members of Brixton Defence Campaign, the Brixton Black Women's Group and the Black Unity and Freedom Party to travel to Ulster as the guests of the IRA.

Five representatives later travelled to Belfast to meet with top Provo, Joe Austin.

Blacks and Asians also joined a demonstration in support of IRA prisoners. At the rally – outside Armagh prison – messages of support were read out from the Brixton Women's Group and Asian Women's Resource Centre in Brent, West London.

IRA SHOW US THE WAY!

Support for the IRA also came from Manjit Singh, a leading member of the Asian Youth Movement in Bradford. He told a meeting: "Remember Southall. Remember the Coventry murderers. Remember the Bradford 12. And remember Ireland, where another oppressed minority has been fighting for centuries. They have shown us the way!"

Blacks and Asians have also been in evidence supporting the IRA marches and meetings on the Mainland.

On Sunday 25th November, 1984, a sizable contingent of Blacks were on the 'Moston Martyrs' march in Manchester. This march was in memory of IRA members who murdered a British policeman in 1867.

Blacks and Asians also formed part of the IRA's 'Bloody Sunday' demonstration in Leicester on Sunday 3rd February, 1985.

Still more Immigrants were at two meetings in Brighton's Pavillion Theatre. Both meetings declared their support for IRA terrorism.

At the last 1916 Easter Rising commemeration march in Belfast, members of the violent Asian Newham 7 Defence Campaign were present. And between May 10th and 13th, 1985, a Black delegation visited Sinn Fein/IRA in Ulster.

IRA/IMMIGRANT LINK

From these facts, there can be no doubt that the Blacks, Asians and IRA are working very closely together. It can be no coincidence that the 1985 Race riots proceeded along classic IRA lines.

How long will it be before the IRA and Immigrants establish a formal link? And how long will it take for Ulster's violence to fully spill over onto the Mainland?

Honours among theives

THE Honours (Prevention of Abuses) Act is perhaps one of the less well-known Acts on the Statute Book. It was passed in 1925 after Liberal Party hero David Lloyd-George was found to have discovered that selling Honours was 'a nice little earner'.

It's a pity the Act isn't better known – as then the media might start to press for Mrs Thatcher's prosecution under it, since the Honours List issued at the start of 1986 confirmed the extent of Thatcher's corruption. Instead the press merely whined at the lack of any gongs for the self-appointed saint, Bob Geldof.

All eleven of the private-sector industrialists who have been given peerages under Thatcher's premiership are directors of companies which donate to the Tory Party – nearly £2 million between them in total. Of the 64 knighthoods awarded by the Tories since Thatcher came to power an amazing 67% were linked to companies which between them gave the Tories £4.3 million. These figures are not just a coincidence – obviously the Tories raise cash by using Honours as bribes.

EVIDENCE

Clearer evidence of this is shown by the fact that directors of no less than nine out of the 10 companies which donate most to the Tories funds were given peerages or knighthoods, yet only one director (Lord Weinstock of GEC!) of the 10 largest companies in Britain got a peerage.

Obviously politicians have always misused the Honours system, giving awards to people who have been politically useful, rather than those who have given service to the nation. Yet the extent of Thatcher's corruption is unusual even by the standards of contemporary party-politicians.

Whilst the media largely ignores the blatant way that Thatcher and the Tories rake in millions by criminally bribing businessmen with the offer of Peerages Nationalism Today does not: we call for Thatcher to be charged under the Prevention of Abuses Act. JAIL THIS CROOK NOW!

HOME AFFAIRS

"AN INFORMANT IN EVERY STREET"

INTERNAL police documents, leaked to a national newspaper, have shown that police forces are using a new intelligence network, which enables them to build up dossiers not just on criminals or even their associates, but on ordinary people and political activists.

One plank in this system is the use of members of the public. In the Lothian and Borders force, for example, officers are told "to secure the services of at least one informant in every street, not particularly a paid informant, but someone who knows the inhabitants and is inquisitive enough to find out what is going on". Police officials are told to supply domestic gossip about local residents to station 'collators'.

JOB DESCRIPTION

The job description for the collator of the Merseyside police force says "Information of all kinds should be encouraged on the premise that we do not know today what we will need tomorrow. All items, however insignificant, will be recorded and indexed and will be available to all personnel at all times".

The 'criminal intelligence information sheets' of the Lothian and Borders force include reports such as "Miss G. (whose full name, address and date of birth are given) is now residing with her parents at (full address). She is about three months pregnant". The woman who this report was written about has no criminal record and is not alleged to have been involved in any offence.

Similarly, another report describes how an officer stopped a couple in the centre of Edinburgh, late one night, and searched them for drugs. No drugs were found, but the intelligence sheet records the full names and home addresses of five people whose phone numbers were found in the woman's diary.

Other reports note the full details of people simply because they have been seen travelling in a car or drinking in a pub with someone who has a criminal record.

NEW BREED

One collator described his work as follows: "It used to be a question of recording criminal activity in your area, but the new breed of collator take down everything. We might keep several thousand people in our area name index, and then a couple of hundred in the criminal index. It's hard to say what proportion of the population is covered, but it's colossal. The best source is officers on the street. We get a little from social security, 'though I'm not sure that we're supposed to. The local newspapers – we get photos and addresses. The council give us odds and ends and we have the electoral register to check with".

A New Breed of Policemen ...

'All political activists are to be spied on. All citizens who might be political activists are to be spied on. All citizens are to be spied on. All political activists are enemies of the state. All citizens are enemies of the State. Exterminate political activists. Exterminate! Exterminate! EXTERMINATE"

A Home Office spokesman said at the beginning of December that there was no record or any guidelines or regulations for this system. Several forces including London, Cheshire and Thames Valley keep all this information on computers, and several others are planning to transfer it from their index files in the near future.

This systematic spying on law-abiding people has nothing to do with crime-prevention, which ought to be the only task of the police. It's just one more example of the way that the police force is steadily being transformed into a tool for state repression.

PERSHING 2 -NO THANKS

THERE ARE serious questions about the accuracy and reliability of the US Pershing – 2 missiles based in Western Europe. That was the findings of an exhaustive five-month investigation conducted by America's ABC News.

The US Army cut back the number of tests on the missiles in order to meet an early deadline for placing the missiles in Europe, ABC said.

At first the Army intended to carry out 28 tests. But NATO then requested that the missiles be deployed a year earlier than envisaged. The number of tests was then reduced to 18.

The missiles went into production 16 months prematurely to meet the new deadline. And all considerations of adequate testing were ignored due to the rush to deliver a year early.

FAILURES

Of the 18 tests on Pershing – 2 the US Army have conceeded that four were failures.

On the first test, the missile exploded 14 seconds after it was launched. Tests 13 and 15 were also failures. And on the 16th test the missile had to be destroyed.

The Army claims that 14 of the tests were successful. But the US Army's own summary of test results – obtained by ABC News – indicated that five of these 14 "successful" tests were flawed.

These flaws included:

*Test No. 2 where the terminal guidance system failed and the warhead missed its target.

*Test No. 6 resulted in a massive electrical shorting and a malfunction in the warhead section of the missile.

*Test No. 7 was ruined when a radar transmitter failed. The radar transmitter is the key to Pershing – 2's guidance system. Without it, the missile cannot find its target.

*Test No. 8 was spoilt when the onboard radar antenna stopped spinning for a time. This was due to "an intermittent electrical connection."

*Test No. 9 was marred by an "anomaly" in the warhead. This "anomaly" is still being investigated.

The 18th test did not even count. The missile failed to ignite and was shut down automatically.

These facts make it even more imperative that all American bases in Britain and Europe are closed down. With – possibly – faulty Pershing – 2 missiles littered all over Europe, the danger their presence poses to our Race and Nation cannot be tolerated.

WORLD AFFAIRS

Spain gets the Front message

JUST DAYS after an NF spokesman appeared on the Spanish T.V. current affairs programme La Clave (The Key), the socialist government of Spain ordered the programme off the air permanently. With an average audience of four million, La Clave was for over ten years the country's most important forum for public political debate, but its producer had been warned several times to "toe the line" and end his "Free Speech" policy which gave air time to a number of controversial and unorthodox speakers.

The last straw for the Spanish Establishment came when NF Deputy Chairman Nick Griffin took part in a marathon five hour debate with simultaneous translation on the programme on the subject of "Immigrants in Spain". Also taking part were a Marxist sociologist; a woman from the Spanish Human Rights Association; Jasna Roman, the Roumanian head of the French government's social programme for Immigrants; an African Marxist married to a Spanish girl, and Eligio Hernandez, the Spanish Home Office minister responsible for Immigrant affairs.

The debate centred on the Spanish people's overwhelming hostility to Immigration from North Africa and South America, and on the government's belated decision to introduce stricter Immigration controls. It started out as a rather low-key discussion about the "small numbers" (over half-a million) of Coloureds involved and how the new law would affect them, but things livened up when Nick Griffin told the audience that the British people had been told the same sort of lies in the 1950's. "Politicians talk about 'safeguards' and 'the rights of Immigrants' is irrelevant", he told over 4 million viewers, "the real issue at stake is national and racial survival. The only question to be answered when you talk about Immigration is this: do you want Spain to remain Spanish?"

HEATED EXCHANGES

In the heated exchanges that followed, Nick put over the Nationalist case for racial separation and mutual respect, with great effect, judging by the phone-in debate at the end of the programme and by the enthusiastic reaction of several Spaniards in the streets of Madrid the following day. The high-point came when Nick talked about the Race Laws in Britain and the jailing of Martin Wingfield and Joe Pearce. The Spanish pride themselves on their dedication to freedom of speech and the facts of the case brought an angry reaction from the studio audience, particularly when the cameras focussed on the Black Marxist grinning with approval.

At the end of the evening, the producer stated that the overwhelming majority of phone calls opposed Immigration, and went on to reject the angry call from the programme's representative in London, who attacked him for giving a platform to a "dangerously articulate" spokesman from the National Front.

The writing on the wall: Spanish radicals show what they think of the jailing of Martin Wingfield by daubing the walls of the British Embassy in Madrid.

It seems that the Spanish Establishment also decided that things had got out of hand, for Spain's longest running current affairs programme has now been closed down, leaving only the memory of an all expenses paid trip to Spain for Nick, (Lucky devil – Ed.) and a far better understanding of the dangers of Coloured Immigration for millions of Spaniards.

Death on the Amazon

THE NATIONALIST MOVEMENT has constantly urged that races should be left to live their own lives free from interference and in harmony with nature. This was the case with the majority of South American tribes until the turn of the century. They are now on the verge of extinction.

Perhaps the worst area where these Indian tribes are under threat is in the Amazon. The rain-forests in which they live took 50 million years to evolve, but in two decades may well be gone.

The forest is potentially a desert. It lives off itself, recycling its own nutrients in a fragile balancing act. The Indians understand and respect this. Their own survival has depended on the rational exploitation of the forest and its resources.

SHORT–TERM

In contrast, loggers, miners and their government backers seem unconcerned with the consequences of their short-term actions. Today the mineral rush is on. Its only benefactors are Capitalists, while the Indian peoples are dispossessed in its greedy wake. The destruction of the tribal peoples is claimed by the government to be an evolutionary process. But the Indians claim otherwise. They need and demand the right to own their traditional lands and decide for themselves how they wish to live.

One of the worst hit South American Indian tribes has been the Yanomami. Numbering some 21,000 they live in upland rain forests on the Brazilian-Venezuelan border.

In the early 1970's, the relative peace of the Yanomami was suddenly shattered by government plans to drive the BR–210 highway across their territory. Hundreds of Yanomami died from diseases introduced by the road building crews. Others developed a pathetic roadside existence as beggars in their own lands.

Another tribe that has been hit hard is the Parakana from Brazil. They were moved from their traditional lands by the government who were mining iron ore.

The Parakana have now become disorientated and are neglecting their subsistance base, thus making themselves dependant on Brazilian government handouts. They have also suffered from contamination due to the use of defoliation chemicals, which are widely used by government agencies.

INTERFERENCE

After many years of government interference the South American Indian population has plunged dramatically. Also, in the last twenty years Indian lands have been reduced by half.

Despite facing great difficulties in raising their voice and defending what means the most to them – their culture and their lands – the Indians are fighting back. They have succeeded in getting representation in South American parliaments. They have also started to reclaim back some of their lands.

The fate of the South American Indian could be the fate of the British people if we don't stand up and unite. We have already suffered a massive alien invasion and the stealing of our land by Capitalists. We have also suffered the pollution of our land, seas and air. Our countryside has been torn up.

It's time we stopped this. The British people should take action now!

Louis Farrakhan – Pointing the way for Black America

"THE DECISION of the Home Secretary, Mr Douglas Hurd, to ban the entry into Britain of Mr Louis Farrakhan, the American Black Muslim leader, has been warmly welcomed in parliamentary circles as well as in the Jewish community".

– So read part of an article in a recent issue of the Jewish Chronicle. But why are parliamentary and Jewish circles so happy about Farrakhan's exclusion from Britain? Just who is Louis Farrakhan? And why is he so feared by the 'Powers That Be'?

Louis Farrakhan is 51 and the leader of 25,000 American Black Muslims, known as the Nation of Islam. He took over the leadership of the Nation of Islam from its founder – Elijah Muhammad – who died in 1975.

Born Louis Eugene Walcott, his parents were West Indians who went to America from Britain. He originally started life as a calypso singer known as Calypso Gene or The Charmer. But soon Farrakhan became involved in the Black Muslim movement.

Over the last couple of years, however, Farrakhan has shot into the public's eye. He originally gained publicity whilst campaigning for Jesse Jackson during the US Presidential elections. There he openly attacked Israel and the effeminate race-mixing pop 'star' Michael Jackson.

Not surprisingly Jesse Jackson's election trail ended dramatically. But whilst Jackson pleaded for forgiveness, Farrakhan remained unrepentant. And, if anything, Farrakhan has become even more forthright.

MEDIA TARGET

Farrakhan's views on Hitler – "a great man, wickedly great" – and his increasing attacks on the power of the Jews has made him a prime media target. But Farrakhan is not deterred – consider his latest attack on Jewish power in America:

"The Jewish lobby has a stranglehold on the Government. Whatever they want they get, and the President himself is punking out to the Jewish lobby."

Not surprisingly, Farrakhan has friends in the White racialist movement and the Arab world. Both the Ku Klux Klan and Colonel Gaddafi have sent him donations.

The media likes to portray Farrakhan as a 'bigot' and 'lunatic'. But slanders and lies have had no effect on the growth of the Nation of Islam.

Farrakhan's long-term aim is the separation of the races and the creation of an all-Black nation within the United States. However, as a short-term measure he is promoting the idea of Black Pride and Black Unity.

FIRST STEP

As a first step, he has set up an organisation called POWER – People Organised and Working for Economic Rebirth. POWER exists to run a number of its own enterprises and encourages Black businessmen to link together "in a solidarity that will serve the wider community". Farrakhan believes that such co-operation and self-help will form the solid foundations of his future all-Black nation.

Farrakhan has been increasingly turning his attentions to Britain. And that is why the politicians and Jews are getting jumpy. Already his Black supporters over here have made statements that are highly critical of Jewish power in Britain. They also support his idea of the separation of the races.

The thought of anybody – Black or White – exposing Jewish power and demanding racial separation and racial freedom is an horrific challenge to the 'Powers That Be'. And that is why they banned Farrakhan from Britain.

 NATIONALISTS wishing to contact Mr Farrakhan should write to: Louis Farrakhan, The Nation of Islam, 734 West 79th Street, Chicago, Illinois, 60620, USA.

...BUT YOU CAN'T JAIL THE IDEAL

YOU CAN JAIL IDEALISTS BUT YOU CAN'T JAIL THEIR IDEALS! That was the defiant message of Ian Stuart, the Nationalist rock star, and lead vocalist with Skrewdriver as he wrote "Faith in the Struggle" from Wayland Prison.

Ian's patriotic lyric's have influenced thousands of young Britons – that's why the Establishment had Police Officers perjure themselves, to ensure Ian got 'sent down'.

Faith in the Struggle

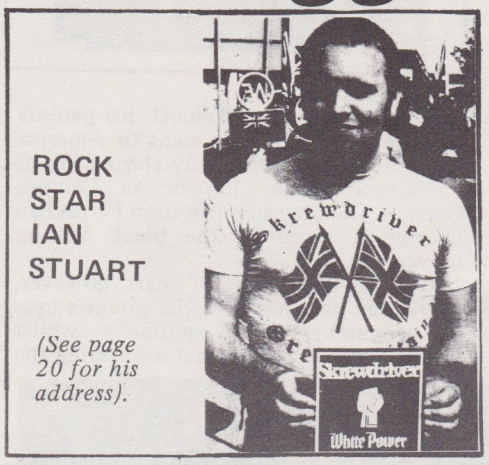
IN THESE DAYS of uncertainty, and political control of the Western mind by the Zionist media, what have the European – and, closer to home, the British – people got to give them a glimmer of hope for the future? As you look around and see the hold that the three party dictatorship has got on Britain, you could be forgiven for sitting back and letting this tide of depression and no-hope flow over you. "Three party dictatorship?" you may ask. It has become a three party dictatorship since the men who control the pursestrings decided that the 'Gang of Four' and their liberal allies were just chips of the same old corrupt block as the already-controlled Tory and Labour parties.

Any political party that constitutes a threat whatsoever to this monstrous set-up will be viciously slandered by the puppet media, as well as being limited politically by hypocritical legal means ('Race Relations' Acts etc.) and finally criminalised, to attempt to draw public support away from that particular party's cause.

In a normal society the public would question why it was that their own people were being oppressed and jailed for wanting to put their own country and culture first. They would also want to know why other races and cultures were constantly promoted and feted whilst their own infinitely superior history, and way of life, were severely neglected and, indeed, belittled. But this, as we know, is no ordinary society. The corridors of power, of this once great nation, have been hijacked by creatures of the very worst kind. In some circumstances some of these creatures are actually British people. These traitors, even more than the aliens who control their every move, must be dealt with more severely than anybody else, when the final reckoning comes. These people have sold out their own race and nation for personal gain.

OBSTACLES

We, as Nationalists, must overcome the most massive obstacles ever put before a political movement before we can hope to grasp the reins of political power. The first and most important thing we must possess is faith. Faith in the greatness of our race, faith in the ideology of our movement, and finally faith in the inevitability of our final victory.



This faith will sustain us through dark periods of oppression, captivity, and even death. Faith is not something that dies with the individual, but an everlasting flame which will not be extinguished until the end of time. It is this, and this alone, which our enemies cannot destroy.

We will face increasing media slander, which we will not be allowed to reply to. We will face increased harassment by the politically-controlled police force, who, against maybe even their own consciences, will nevertheless obey orders, and set us up for prison sentences that are totally unfounded. We must expect this, and be mentally and physically prepared to face up to this struggle. Only if we are ready in mind and body for the most treacherous forms of opposition will we have the strength to survive, and carry on our struggle throughout our lives.

COMMITTED

If we here in Britain are to win through to our goal our key members, and indeed as many as possible of our total membership, must be spiritually and politically committed to our belief in race and destiny.

We must continue to create, and cement ties with our kindred organisations in Europe, to make sure that none of the great achievements of European culture and history are forgotten or neglected. Only by greater European co-operation can we eventually hope to offer a viable alternative to the fear-ridden Bolshevik empire, or the vulgar, drug-sodden, multi-racial mess that American capitalism has become.

In the new Europe which will be created, peace would reign because of the mutual respect, for the peoples and cultures, of this once-great area of world concern. No more would alien criminality, and imported vice, be rife in our cities, where a return to the old community spirit would be achieved by decent housing for all, and an end to the monstrous 'tower block' existence.

SELF–SUFFICIENCY

No more would our rural villages and farmlands be neglected and run-down, and a spirit of self-sufficiency, and pride in working on British soil for the good of Britain and the British people, could prevail. Due to a policy of armed neutrality Europe would no longer be an arena for U.S. and Soviet War Games, and their disgusting ideologies could be kept far from Europe's shores.

To achieve all this we, and our European comrades, must above all have faith. Our enemies are strong, and presently we are relatively weak in numbers, but unbeatable in spirit. We must realise that we, and our enemies, are engaged in a struggle for the survival of the European races. If we fail we will be destroyed along with European Civilisation; and we must accept in our hearts, that if victory is eventually ours we must deal with our enemies in the most ruthless fashion.

If we do not destroy their cancer at the root we will have to face up to its reincarnation at a later stage. We must have faith in this, our battle to the death.

DRUGS & DEGREDATION: MEMORIES OF PENTONVILLE

"WATCHOUT for the woofters!", was the most frequent remark made to me when I informed anyone of my intended spell in prison. Although said in jest, the worry of being locked up with one of Britain's steadily growing 'gay community' was in my mind when I started my internment at Pentonville in November 1985.

It appeared that my suspicions were to be founded when a head was poked through my cell door and I was asked whether I wanted 'a bit of blow'. Having told the gentleman concerned exactly what to do I was hoping that the word would go around and I would be left alone. No such luck, the very next evening a black face popped around the door and I was asked, "Do you want a bit of black, man?"

On exercise the next day I told an 'old lag', who had been helpful to me with advice on prison routine during those first traumatic days, about my experiences. He laughed at my suspicions and cheerfully announced "They're not gay-boys son, they're pushing dope".

SMOKING CANNABIS

It took me about a week to realise that nearly half the inmates in Pentonville prison were either smoking cannabis every evening, most evenings or at a week-end.

Dope was the life-blood at Pentonville, rapidly replacing tobacco as the most saleable commodity. It was always a topic of conversation from the morning slop-out where the Rastafarians sang their jerkily mumbled songs in praise of 'ganja', to the exercise yard where there was always someone rushing around trying 'to score' or 'make a deal'.

I knew of two 'big dealers' in drugs during my period at Pentonville. One told me that he would make in excess of £1,800 in deals during his two month stay. He was a resident in 'D' wing but one day managed to slip into 'A' wing's exercise yard. He was immediately recognised by the other inmates who flocked around him to 'strike a deal'.

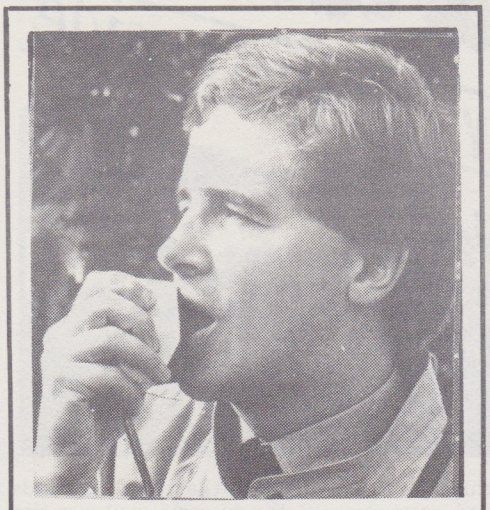
A quarter of 'black' would be sold although no money or drugs would immediately change hands. On the outside, money would be sent by a contact of the purchaser to an address given by the dealer. When the money had been deposited, the purchaser would request a visit from a person whose name and address would be given to him by the dealer. When the visit took place the dope changed hands.

The visit was often highly amusing as neither the inmate nor his visitor knew what each other looked like. Nearly always it turned into a farce with the visitor shouting "Jimmy, where are you? I can't see you", with the reply coming "Is that you Lucy? This is Jimmy over here".

STONED

I saw inmates so stoned they could hardly put two words together. I saw inmates so stoned they had to walk along leaning up against the wall to hold themselves up. I saw an inmate carted off to the block (punishment cells) after a search during an evening class for a teacher's mislaid wallet revealed his dope. I saw inmates running, jumping and trying to catch the pigeons on the exercise yard completely stoned out of their minds. The next day they could be seen shuffling around the same yard "trying to get themselves togetner".

I believe the prison authorities have deliberately turned a blind eye to the use of soft drugs in prison in their quest for a peaceful life as Britain's prisons become more and more congested with a growing number of people from different cultures with different conventions to those of our own. Just like community policing where the police admit to turning a blind eye to certain offences, the same rules appear to apply in Pentonville.



MARTIN WINGFIELD, undaunted by the 3 month prison sentence imposed on him by the State, was unanimously elected NF Chairman by his Directorate colleagues on his release from jail.

The unfortunate spin-off is that British youngsters, to whom cannabis is not part of their culture, are taking advantage of the situation and their short sharp shock treatment is turning into a drug-befuddled sick joke.

I was able to view my stay at H.M. Prison Pentonville without the blinkers of bitterness, for not only was I not guilty of the offence I had been charged with, I didn't even recognise the law I had been prosecuted under. I did not regard myself as a criminal and had no intention of acting like one. At all times I strode around the prison with my head held high and never wasting an opportunity of making mental notes of the things I saw. The effect of my attitude was that seldom a day went by without an officer telling me, "You don't look as though you should be here" from which followed the question "What did you do?".

On my first morning when interviewed by the governor he gave me a lecture on rabble-rousing in prison. "We've got many inmates from the ethnic minorities here Wingfield, so you are just going to have to learn to live with them". The authorities were obviously worried of the possibility that my presence in prison could stir up unrest and I was immediately dispatched to a single cell and allocated a job as cleaner in the education department where for many hours I worked totally alone.

INHUMAN

The conditions in prison were generally inhuman and were entitled to bring the worst out in the inmates. But, both black and white prisoners alike acted with great dignity. There is no doubt in my mind that the anaesthetic effect of smoking dope helped many inmates cope with such degradation.

The education department where I worked, on the other hand, was warm, clean and friendly. The staff treated those inmates on full-time education and others connected with the department with respect and on equal terms which raised the standard of behaviour of even the most moronic inmate.

The staff room which I cleaned every morning had its fair share of left-wing propaganda which was constantly distributed by the Inner London Education Authority, Women Against Police Harrassment, Anti-Racist Teaching and a wealth of other pamphlets supporting various other minority causes covered the literature table. The teachers themselves were very friendly and we had many chats discussing the National Front and its policies. They took great delight in informing me when the Guardian covered the NF.

SUPPORT

Numerous prison officers expressed support for the National Front and others admitted agreement with many NF policies. Many P.O's were upset at a recent case of positive discrimination within the prison service at Pentonville. While officers from the ethnic minorities made up just 1% of the staff, one had been promoted to senior officer; according to another prison officer " . . . over the heads of vastly more experienced officers". Bitter recriminations came from other officers and one summed up their feelings telling me "An inexperienced officer, who can't even speak the Queen's English has been promoted simply because his colour makes it politically expedient to do so".

In 1982, Joe Pearce said after his four months in Chelmsford, "Prison has strengthened my resolve". I'm pleased to say that my spell in Pentonville has done the same for me.

Edmund Burke was so very true when he wrote "He who wrestles with me makes me stronger". By their persecution of National Front members up and down the country the authorities of today are priming and training the National Front for its crusade of tomorrow, a crusade on behalf of the British people under our banner of National Freedom and Social Justice.

IAN ANDERSON

THE M25 London orbital road is now nearing completion, the Channel Tunnel is hitting the headlines while a major battle is being fought over a new 'Euro-Route' linking the Ruhr Valley in Germany with the West Midlands. While in some cases there is some benefit to be derived from new road systems, there is also a great deal of damage done by them.

The present Conservative government seems to be ignoring this damage to our countryside while it is hell-bent on building grandiose new road systems which offer no benefits to the British people but will prove a boon to the growing number of international hauliers and to European industrialists.

One of the most environmentally destructive road schemes is being mis-named the M1/A1 link road. In fact this is just one section of a much larger 'Euro-Route' which is designed to provide a high speed lorry route direct from the industrialised Ruhr Valley in central Europe to our own West Midlands via East Anglian ferry ports. This import highway' is like a dagger pointed at the very heart of industry in Britain. If completed it will rapidly fill Britain with German, Italian and French cars, typewritters, electronic equipment, fridges, chemicals and, perhaps, helicopters.

The point of destination will become impoverished and industrially desolate as multinational firms further centralise their factories in the heart of Europe from where they will distribute their goods to the outlying parts of the continent, such as Britain.

HISTORIC SITE

While lorries hurtle into Britain, the road on which they travel will destroy some of the most beautiful parts of the English countryside. This 'Euro-Route' will pass through the north Northampton Uplands and very close to the historic civil war site at Naseby.

As well as the direct loss of large areas of virgin countryside there is, often even more destructive, secondary effect due to the industrial development which grows up around every motorway. With a major 'Euro-Route' such planning pressure would be immensely greater than with other motorways.

A similar set of problems is bound to be caused by the Channel Tunnel which is being cynically advocated in the newspapers as simply a quicker way for families to get to Europe for their holidays. If that was the main use of such a tunnel Mrs Thatcher would hardly be so enthusiastic (she always flies to Europe anyway – and regrettably she also flies back) and industrialists would hardly be contemplating spending £5,000,000,000.

The real reason for the drive to build this direct link across the Channel is again to speed up the flow of factory produced goods into Britain with the consequent loss of jobs. Again the environmental damage is being ignored in this drive to provide a new influx of imports into Britain. Every conservation group in South East Kent has warned of the destruction of the countryside in the vicinity of Dover while the secondary damage in terms of the industrial development of Kent countryside is being largely ignored by the proponents of the various competing tunnel schemes.

OUTRAGEOUS

But perhaps the most outrageous example of this secondary destruction which follows the building of a major new road is the proposal to turn 760 acres of Essex farmland into an industrial centre. The Tillingham Hall site is mostly well farmed and is a pleasant fenland landscape with hedgerows, copses and a network of footpaths. It is also right in the heart of the Green Belt located around London.

Normally developers are reluctant to try to tackle Green Belt land because of opposition by conservation groups, by local residents and by ordinary British people who love their country. However the temptation of Tillingham Hall was further enhanced by the building of the M25 London orbital road just 4 miles away and this has proved irresistable.

The developers, 'Consortium Developers Ltd.' consisting of nine of Britain's biggest builders including Wimpey, Bovis and Barratt want to build 1 million square feet of factories, offices and warehouses as well as 5,000 houses.

One interesting aspect of this particular battle which will get under way at the planning inquiry in March is that the local M.P. is Harvey Proctor. Mr. Proctor is an archetypal Conservative right-winger and a staunch believer in free trade – i.e. money is what counts, not people or jobs; however apparently free trade, like immigration, is fine unless its consequences come too close to home. Surprise, surprise Mr. Proctor who would, no doubt, be in favour of a development in Hertfordshire, Cheshire or absolutely anywhere except Essex has come out against the proposal. After all to come out in favour of it when there is a General Election on the horizon would not be very sensible – politically.

But this is not the only battle going on: Tory Solihull intends to expand the National Exhibition Centre into the Green Belt. Barratts have been given approval by the Secretary of State for Scotland to build 1,000 houses in the Green Belt south of Edinburgh. Hertfordshire County Council has horrified people by proposing to build some 20,000 houses on its Green Belt land.

TEST SITE

However Tillingham Hall is clearly going to be the test site, especially with Consortium Developments expecting to spend £500,000 on presenting its case to the planning inquiry while a number of national conservation groups are intending to oppose the development. If it goes ahead then the prospects for Britain's countryside will look very gloomy indeed.

Our countryside is one of the most precious assets within our heritage. It is being threatened with destruction while our inner cities are crowded with empty derelict houses and while the lack of jobs is causing a population drift away from Ulster, away from Welsh and Scottish towns and villages and from towns and cities in the North of England.

What is needed is a radical re-appraisal of Britain's national economic and residential needs which can and must be achieved in harmony with our natural environment. Until this can be done a holding action must be fought. The evil and destructive designs of these multinational industrialists, developers and motorway builders must be frustrated with all the means at our disposal. If the heritage of our countryside is destroyed it may never be possible to restore it.

General Election: Why We Must Prepare NOW

IT HAS BEEN a regular failing of the National Front in the past to ignore Election preparations until the very last minute. That is not a mistake we intend making again. With the next General Election only a few years away Nationalism Today asked Graham Williamson, Chairman of the National Front's Election Department (pictured right) to outline the Party's objectives in contesting it. Future articles will examine electioneering in greater detail, as well as considering the relationship between electioneering, and the National Front's overall strategic objectives.

THE PARTY'S experience of elections since the General Election of May 1979 have been depressing to say the least. Ever since that fateful day seven years ago the vast majority of election results have hovered around the 1–3% mark, a long way from the heady days of the mid 70's.

Bewitched by the promising council elections of 1976 and the defeat of liberals at by-elections shortly afterwards, the party failed to recognise the effect of the media smears, and Thatchers contrived 'double speak' on immigration, on the electorate. Thus the membership was unprepared for the disastrous result and consequently the party was torn asunder by splits and desertions, fuelled by disillusionment with the poll.

The party's vote was even further reduced in the General Election of May 1983 (although the membership was no longer shocked).

Since that time the party has undergone a transformation in its leadership and its strategy (if it can be claimed that there was a previous one), and a great deal of hard and honest introspection has taken place.

It soon became clear that we had deluded ourselves about our electoral potential and built our successes on sand. No effort and no roots had been sunk into local communities, no council seats had been won, yet we believed we could capture not just one parliamentary seat but eventually sufficient to form a government. Truly a case of running before you can walk!

BACK TO BASICS

So the party has gone back to basics by focussing on council seats, with its 'Target Ward' strategy, where units can mobilise sufficient resources to run a professional campaign before and in an election. Rather that diluting our energies over a number of areas we are concentrating on one.

Election results will, for the present, merely indicate how successful or otherwise the 'Target Ward' strategy has been implemented in an area. Until we can truly nurture some grassroots support we cannot begin to expect a respectable showing in a parliamentary seat.

The raising of the Election Deposit to £500 on the 1st October last year makes such seats even more unattractive.

Given this state of affairs then why has the party's leadership announced that the National Front is to fight 50+ seats at the next General Election?

The main 1979 General Election meeting – although impressive in size encouraged members to think that campaigning only had to start four weeks before Polling Day.

Firstly, there is presently a concerted effort by our enemies to smear us as 'terrorists' in order to justify future oppressive laws and actions. Unfortunately not having any evidence, as the Brussels tragedy shows, will not discourage the media from making such outrageous claims. If the party stood in far fewer seats than the 59 fought in 1983 the media would claim that we had abandoned the ballot box and therefore must be channelling our energies elsewhere . . . .

Secondly, the party will be presenting a more 'national' profile by standing in a greater number of provincial seats than in 1983 (where we were concentrated in London). Our policies will be brought to the attention of a large number of people who will, for example, be receiving our literature for the first time. Our relatively young and inexperienced committees will also receive valuable training in fighting such an election.

FOCUS ATTENTION

Thirdly, and most importantly, General Elections focus the public's attention on politics and political parties. By fighting 50+ seats the public will recognise the National Front as the only serious alternative to the establishment parties. The campaign, and particularly the TV and radio broadcast, will enable us to highlight our radical policies and thus attract people to our party as no other General Election has done before.

What then must units do now?

1) Choose the seats they wish to fight (normally containing their target ward).
2) Begin to groom potential candidate(s).
3) Start to raise the finance necessary to fight the election (at least £1,000 per seat).
4) After choosing the seat start leafletting/postering and paperselling in the area.

Forthcoming articles will deal with these points in greater detail.

We are no longer under any illusions about the results, given the party's 'image', for our time has not yet arrived. However opportunities at the polls will arise, partly through our own efforts and partly through economic and racial chaos. These opportunities will pass unexploited if we are not trained or organised in fighting professional campaigns. That is why you must work hard and learn valuable lessons in your target wards and in the forthcoming General Election campaign.

ULSTER MU

EVENTS IN ULSTER seem certain to be cataclysmic and traumatic in 1986. Many British Nationalists in the NF are asking "What can the NF do to help the Loyalist cause? What will be our role in Ulster?"

The Crisis in Ulster

DAVID KERR

AS WE ENTER 1986, Ulster is in a state of political turmoil. Local councils are indefinitely suspended, government ministers are boycotted and picketed everywhere they go, former 'moderates' are now militant and the former bitterly divided ranks of loyalism have closed in unity. On a cold winter's day in November, 203,000 people, (twenty per-cent of the adult population of Ulster), assembled peacefully at the Belfast City Hall to demonstrate their opposition to the so-called 'Hillsborough Agreement'. Many observers are seriously concerned that the province may suffer major civil disorder before the year is through. Why is there such a crisis now?

TREACHERY

The answer is simple – Westminster's treachery! The British Government has conceded a role for the Irish Republic in the administration of the British province of Ulster. This is ostensibly to end the feelings of 'alienation' among those Ulster Roman Catholics who have been voting for Provisional Sinn Fein.

The Provos are now expected to fade away because a millionaire tea merchant from Cork has been appointed to speak for the republican minority in Ulster. According to one prominent SDLP spokesman – "There is no longer any need for the IRA as the British can be relied upon to crush militant loyalist opposition to the new London/Dublin junta".

SDLP POLICY IMPOSED

For many years the republican Social Democratic and Labour Party has argued that the only way to 'progress', (that is republican victory), was to go over the heads of the Ulster electorate with some form of agreement between the Westminster and Leinster House governments.

This was the idea behind the devious New Ireland Forum in 1983. When Margaret Thatcher and Garret FitzGerald signed the Anglo-Eire Agreement on November 15, 1985, they imposed SDLP policy on the people of Ulster.

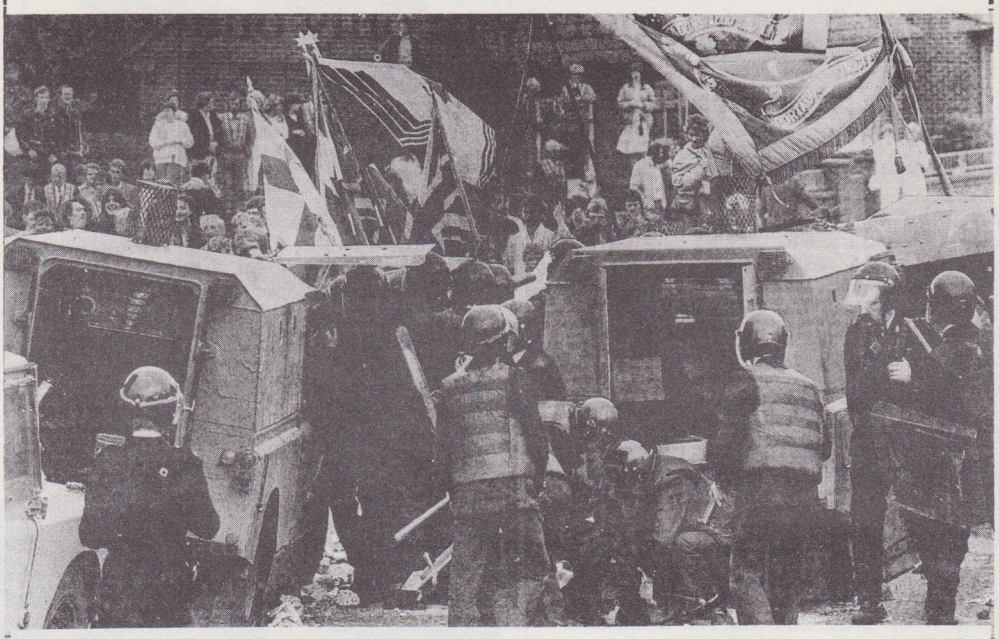
LOYALISTS EXCLUDED

This agreement had been the subject of intense media speculation and numerous leaks throughout much of last year. Loyalists became more angry as it became clear that secret negotiations were going on between British and Eire officials. This sense of outrage increased as it was learnt that loyalists were deliberately kept guessing while all the time the republican SDLP and officials from the United States government and the Vatican were kept fully briefed on the proceedings.

COLONIAL JUNTA

The Hillsborough Agreement has virtually expelled Ulster from the United Kingdom. Ulster had always been kept at arms length from mainland Britain by successive governments. The British political parties which voted overwhelmingly to ratify this treacherous document are not themselves answerable to the Ulster electorate. They have always refused to organise or fight elections in the province. (The only British party to do both is of course the National Front). Ulster is now governed by an unelected colonial junta which calls itself the 'Intergovernmental Conference'.

The British Secretary of State for Northern Ireland still nominally wields the powers of government which are now 'guided' by the Intergovernmental Conference – a secret body which is jointly chaired by the Secretary of State and the Eire Foreign Minister.



Militant Loyalists take to the streets of Belfast.

LOYALIST RESISTANCE

Loyalists are deeply dismayed that Westminster could so arbitrarily sign away their liberties. Loyalist resistance is getting stronger and loyalists have managed to remain united and steadfast in their determination to smash the treacherous Hillsborough Agreement. This is in spite of an intense propaganda campaign by the Eire government, the Northern Ireland Office, the Belfast Telegraph and the advocates of treachery and 'peace at any price' to bribe, cajole and split the loyalist community into acceptance of the regime.

Ulster can never be the same again. Loyalists are beginning to realise that they have not been treated equally with their fellow Britons in England, Scotland and Wales. Even the isolated whites in black inner cities have still more security than Border loyalists. Now that Ulster is governed by an unelected junta many loyalists are reassessing their loyalties. The Tories have betrayed Ulster to the republican enemy, Westminster endorsed their treachery and the Queen didn't lift a finger to help her devoted subjects.

THE ALTERNATIVE

The only short-term answer to preserve Ulster's identity and freedom is to exercise the right to self-determination and set up an Independent State. This course of action has its risks and may possibly fail. However, defeat will become inevitable if loyalists carry on as they did until last year. If we in Ulster win we can become a beacon of hope for Britain's nationalists, a shelter in the time of storms and in the event of a successful British national revolution we can negotiate to rejoin the British union on the terms of equal citizenship for all.

UST FIGHT!

cene in Ulster, and explains why an independent state.
Deputy Chairman, Nick Griffin, ls on Ulster to declare U.D.I. He ll play in the coming events.

Unpredictable though events in Northern Ireland are, one thing is certain: Ulster must fight, as she has always fought, to survive; and her fellow Briton's on the land must join her struggle, for one day the people on the mainland will have to fight to survive also, and they will then need Ulster's help . . . .

The N.F. Solution

NICK GRIFFIN

WHEN THE STORY of the British National Revolution is written, it is certain that events in Northern Ireland will be seen as crucial in our rise to power. And though it is difficult to see things in their true perspective when you are living through them day by day, it is possible, perhaps even likely, that these crucial events will occur in Ulster over the next few months.

No-one will deny that the treasonable Anglo-Irish agreement has brought matters to a head, or that the Establishment's contemptuous reaction to the united opposition to it of a million Loyalists is piling boxes of explosive around the long-burning fuse of their anger, frustration and fear. The people of Ulster have finally been brought to the brink of an open uprising – not against the few hundred Republican terrorists who have been allowed to wreck their lives, but against the British Establishment which has permitted them to do so and embarked on a shameless policy of treason and betrayal. An ever-increasing number of Ulstermen are being forced to the same conclusion as the National Front's 1985 A.G.M., which passed a policy motion declaring the Party's belief that "A Unilateral Declaration of Independence from the British government is the only way in which they can maintain their freedom and identity as part of the British family of Nations."

LOYALIST TRADITION

There is a significant Loyalist tradition calling for full autonomy for Ulster. In 1912, Carson made preparations for the establishment of a "provisional government of Ulster", but the First European Brothers' War intervened and the flower of the UVF went off to die in the mud of Flanders for the same pack of political jackals they had set out to defy.

More recently, W.F. McCow, Speaker of the Ulster House of Commons until 1965, used the Unionist newsheet to advocate Dominion status and demand that "Ulster should get full and complete independent legislative control over her own territory and destiny." This call was later taken up by the political arm of the Ulster Defence Association, the Ulster Loyalist Democratic Party, in 1981, when they called for the introduction of an agreed written constitution for Ulster within the United Kingdom and reaffirmed their long-term aspiration as the achievement of Ulster National sovereignty.

The fact is that independence is the Loyalists' only hope. The very best they can expect from the British Establishment is for the Tories to keep their promise about Ulster "remaining British for as long as the majority so wish." If they are lucky that gives them 25 years, then the certainty of rule from Dublin as a result of immigration from Eire and the higher Catholic/Republican birthrate.

ROTTEN STATE

Does this constitute a call to "break up the United Kingdom"? Well, it certainly would involve breaking the hold of the Establishment over part of Britain. Yes, it would begin the break-up of the System's "United Kingdom", but what else is our aim, if not the destruction of this rotten State – the State that has forced on us mass immigration, an unjust and brutal economic system and deadly foreign military occupation? If this State, this "United Multi-Racial Sewer" survives, then our Race and Nations will die. It must be destroyed.

The important thing is that Ulster after UDI will still be "British" in terms of culture and identity. Indeed, since loyalty to the present System will lead inevitably to betrayal and defeat, a UDI from the British State is paradoxically the only way in which Ulster can preserve for ever its position as part of the British Family of Nations. UDI will not break the unity of the British peoples, for nationality is not made by passports and government decrees but by race and tradition. Belonging to a nation is an affair of the heart, not a matter of bits of paper and the whining of politicians.

Since our aim, then, is the overthrow of the Establishment, we must seek a Revolution. And the situation in Ulster is fast becoming Revolutionary. If things develop as they easily could, and if we influence them as easily as we should, then our British Revolution will start in Ulster. We must look on the idea of an independent Ulster not as a breaking-up of Britain, but as the first liberated zone of our future Britain. For it will be free – free from U.S. bases, free from at least the worst of capitalist exploitation, free from mass immigration and free from repressive Race Laws.

BASE AND BEACON

Imagine all that sitting just a few miles away from a mainland Britain wracked by racial violence and economic chaos! The young State would form a base and a beacon which would strengthen our position a thousand-fold. Seen with the hind-sight of history events in Ulster in the months to come will stand out as the most important political change to affect Britain this century. The present situation in Ulster represents the best opportunity for a genuine National Revolution anywhere in Europe. History beckons us, we must not turn our backs.

Although the National Front is growing fast in Northern Ireland, we cannot expect to play the leading role in this unfolding drama, but we are in the position of supporting actors whose performance will make the show. Ian Adamson's fine work The Identity of Ulster ends with a chapter entitled "The Third Way". In it we see, through a slightly liberal haze, a mirror image of our call for a Third Position – neither Capitalism nor Communism. Such ideas have a strong hold in Ulster, but so much energy has of necessity been devoted to the military struggle that they have not been as fully developed by radical Loyalists as they have by the National Front. This lack of clear direction could yet prove the undoing of Ulster, by leading either to irresolute half-measures and compromise, or to a slide into a futile and indefencible sectarian blood-bath, or again to the betrayal of a successful UDI by the handing over of power to the "fur-coat brigade" – the wealthy bourgeoisie whose devotion to profit is far stronger than any feelings for their land and folk. This crisis may well be Ulster's last chance, if it is missed involvement in the resulting shambles will be the kiss of death to any organisation on the mainland and the National Front will have to accept that Ulster, like Rhodesia, is finished. There are more than enough problems to overcome on the mainland without wasting NF energies in a struggle that will have been doomed by the political inexperience and insular stupidity of its leadership..

IDEOLOGICAL BACKBONE

Our task in Ulster is to provide the ideological backbone to prevent such a disaster and to help provide the blue-print for the social and economic structure of the new Nation.

Meanwhile, on the mainland, we will have equally important work to do. We must make the British people as a whole realise that the establishment of a sovereign Ulster is the only way to stop the bloodshed and bring home the English, Scottish and Welsh troops without surrendering to the cowardly murderers of the IRA. It is also essential that mainland patriots do everything they can to counter the pro-Fenian propaganda of the Marxists and stop them providing aid to the terrorists. Abroad, the NF's widely acknowledged position as one of the most respected Racial Nationalist movements in the world also places us in a unique position from which to influence foreign Nationalist groups and swing them behind the Ulster cause. Whatever happens, it will be a close run struggle, and every scrap of support will be vital.

The Ulster question is central to the future of the British peoples; the stakes could not be higher. So we must be ready to switch the entire resources of the National Front to campaign on this issue alone. Our British comrades in Ulster demand this from us in repayment for generations of blood sacrifice for us. And then, of course, there is the old Marxist saying that "the British Revolution will start in Ireland". For once the Reds are right, but it won't quite be what they had in mind!

THE WHITE INTERNATIONAL is an occasional series in which Nationalism Today examines the development of various different Nationalist groups around the world. In this article, Derek Holland focusses on the Portuguese group, the NATIONAL ACTION MOVEMENT.

Portugal's Future

FOR MOST National Revolutionaries in Northern Europe, Portugal is a largely unknown quantity beyond the fact that it is extremely poor and was governed until 1974 by the charismatic Dr. Salazar – known affectionately by the peasantry as 'The One'. In the years since his death, Portugal has gone the way of the rest of Europe, and become the victim of bankers and communists. It seemed, until recently, that the forces of National Resistance in this country had lost the will to live, to maintain the banner of Nationhood. Yet, as with all revolutions that are essentially spiritual, resurrection is a principle of life.

In June 1985, an association of young men, animated by a profound love of Portugal and her traditions, came together and formed the National Action Movement (M.A.N.). They defined their task as the building of a political and cultural alternative that would combat the spiritual decadence that has smothered the soul of Portugal for too long. The leader of M.A.N. is Luis Henriques, a burly young man, cool, determined and even a little reserved for one of Latinblood; yet the initial period under his guidance has witnessed tremendous progress in this struggle. An association that began as a handful of people in Lisbon has become a movement of over a dozen bustling branches built on the principles of membership education and militant activism, and the signs are that this progress will continue to accelerate. This growth is all the more remarkable when one considers that comrade Henriques's movement is so poor that it makes the NF look like Barclay's Bank!

GROWTH

Factors assisting this growth in national feeling are numerous, but one undoubted contribution is MAN's total adherence to the 'Third Position' – the National Revolutionary belief that each Nation, People and Culture can only find its true self when the grotesque materialisms of the Communist and Capitalist powerblocks have been thrown off. Thus for the leadership of MAN, it is essential that all militants espouse an authentic nationalism, popular, traditionalist and revolutionary. It is a message that is constantly re-iterated in their small broadsheet, Action, and resulting in the recruitment of idealistic youth. It is also interesting to note that MAN has succeeded, to some degree, in recruiting the older intellectuals that underpinned Salazar's government, thereby profiting from a reservoir of knowledge and experience denied youth.

Whatever the background of MAN's recruits, it is maintained that adherence to certain values is sacrosanct: the supremacy of Spirit over Matter, resulting in dedication to Loyalty, Honour, Faith, Comradeship and Sacrifice; the acceptance of the Nation as a substantial reality which demands Order, Hierarchy and Social Justice. The strong emphasis of MAN on the spiritual plane of action has bred a total contempt for the charade – found throughout Europe – called 'Democracy'. The groups and parties, with their momentary majorities, rootless minorities and selfish individualism, have shown that they are incapable of leading the Nation; they offer the people bread and circuses, when the people want the bread of life that elevates the soul, combats evil and builds a community that acts as one in one spirit. It is because there is an unbridgeable gap between the aims of the materialist and 'democratic' parties of the Old Order, and the vision of a National Revolutionary Portugal, that Luis Henriques has determined that MAN will not play the electoral games of the Establishment. Asked what MAN's mode of action would be, he commented: "We stand for National Revolution, one that will transform the decadent world we live in by example. Our task then is to make contact with the people, educate and cultivate those possessed of good tendencies and noble purposes, and organize them in such a way as to transform society." He went on to remark that the type of person they are seeking are those who reject the corruption and vileness of the capitalist system. "We will oppose this system with our warrior vocation. The new culture, that we long for, will encourage all that is beautiful and noble in Tradition whether it be a matter of men, Art, institutions or society. We stand for Tradition, but we do not reject that true modernity which is the actualization of the Eternal."

"The New Man confronts the Old Order"

WAY FORWARD

The way forward therefore for MAN is clear: create a new type of person whose spirit of sacrifice and loyalty to their principles will shine forth – in other words the New Person will be the highest form of Propaganda because people are converted by Example not rhetoric. But comrade Henriques does not intend that the New Person must be fashioned first and then directed to political conflict – he believes that the New Person is fashioned through struggle. Therefore, whilst militants must undergo an appropriate level of instruction, they must also be active in the schools and universities, and in the factories and workshops, distributing their papers and stickers. Indeed, there is a fine logic behind the idea of the Militant as Propaganda – a poor movement cannot produce a mass of literature, but this will be no obstacle to a movement which can produce Militants whose actions speak louder than words. This principle is something that the NF should adopt as a matter of urgency, for no amount of glossy literature can convince our people if our members contradict their beliefs through their actions.

LOVE OF PORTUGAL

One thing that becomes crystal clear when talking with Luis Henriques is that his love of Portugal is total, but it is a love that extends to the whole of Europe because we are one People and one Culture. This love of Europe shows itself in different ways, but it has had a practical result for the leadership of the National Front. Since the Falklands war, relations between British and Spanish nationalists have been poisoned, non-existent. It is thanks to the mediating efforts of Henriques that Nick Griffin's recent live appearance on Spanish TV was a double success; not only could we tell the Spanish people that we do not hate them , that we wish to return Gibraltar to them, but we were rewarded with the hand of friendship of several Spanish National Revolutionary groups, thereby strengthening our quest for a Europe-wide National Revolution.

Patiently, quietly, almost unseen, Portugal is making its contribution to European rebirth. It is for that reason that all NF members will follow the direction of MAN with interest in the coming years, and will wish them every success. FORWARD TO THE NEW EUROPE!

Britannia rules the waves

IF THE DEPARTMENT of Energy is to be believed, the only option to a fossil based power supply industry is the nuclear power industry -- complete with its waste disposal and environmental dangers, together with the unknown side-effects of continuous discharge into the rivers and seas of Britain. Conservative Government policy is firmly entrenched in the belief that nuclear power must be the answer to the country's future energy problems.

It will come as no surprise to Nationalists and environmentalists to learn that a recent report published by the Wave Energy Conversion Research Team at the University of Edinburgh has offered evidence to suggest that, given adequate investment, "wave energy" (using the natural movement of waves and tide flow to generate electrical power) could produce electricity more cheaply than nuclear, coal or oil powered conventional power stations. The report, together with nine years of research has, however, been totally rejected by the Government.

Norway, this year, has seen the completion of the world's very first wavepower conversion power station, which is currently producing electricity at a cost of just 4 pence per kilowatt hour – which is substantially cheaper than the cost from the newest of Britain's conventional power stations. The CEGB's own published cost figures for the most efficient coal-fired stations show costs at 4.3 pence per KwHr.

Geographically speaking Britain, as an island, is ideally situated to lead the world not just in the technological exploration and development of wavepower conversion power stations, but in turning such a system very much to its own advantage for home domestic and industrial consumption. Should an economically viable wavepower system be introduced to complement the national grid then obviously the current accelerating trends towards nuclear power can be reversed and a completely new alternative to nuclear power introduced.

ENVIRONMENTAL ADVANTAGES

Despite the economic and environmental advantages of wavepower, nine years of investigation and research have been halted by the Government and the project cancelled completely – giving the Norwegians an unprecedented world lead in wavepower conversion technology!

Research figures from the DoE own investigations into wavepower conversion indicate that wave energy available off Britain's coastlines could exceed 125,000 megawatts (Norway's prototype wavepower station produces 50 megawatts) and that Britain's own technological exploration had, prior to the projects' cancellation, already achieved results comparable to the Norwegians.

Prior to the Government's cancellation of the research project the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU) issued a report in which it stated that in less than twenty years of practical exploration the real costs of wavepower conversion could be priced at between 2 pence and 3 pence per KWhr – 25% less than the most efficient of Britain's coal-fired stations! Wavepower conversion also has a built-in advantage over alternative energy production in that during the winter months, when demand for electricity is at its highest, wavepower is at its strongest, leading to a natural rise in potential and efficiency to coincide with demand.

A future National Front government must be prepared to invest in its own independent energy programme of which wavepower conversion must play a leading role – irrespective of international financial pressures. If we fail in this vital technological task we cannot hope to build the prosperous and self-sufficient nation – free from environmental pollution and nuclear power – we so desperately seek. The National Front should pledge its full support for alternative energy sources and seek to immediately reintroduce a programme of practical wavepower conversion projects in order to safeguard the future of Britain's environment and guarantee our nation a cheap and safe alternative source of power.

ON THE GREEN FRONT

Lead weight around our necks

IN 1983 the Tories promised to introduce lead-free petrol to the UK, but since then lead-free fuels have received little publicity, and all the signs point to the Tories bowing down to their powerful friends in the oil and motor industry.

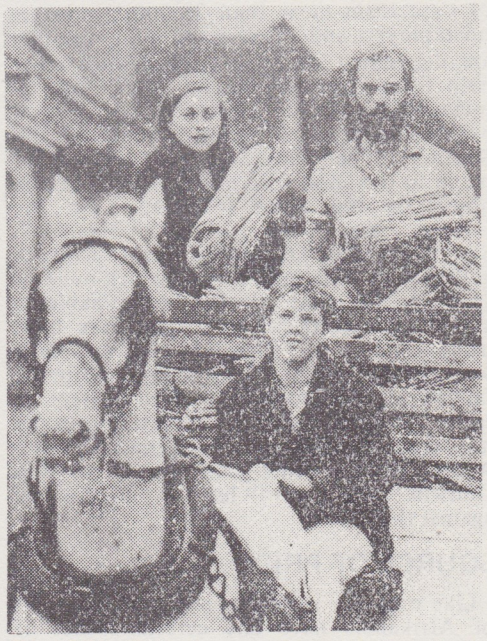
The problem is made even worse with Britain being bound to the EEC. Britain, Germany and Denmark favour 1989 for the date when member countries can aquire new cars which will use lead-free petrol. If that date isn't absurd in itself, when you consider that Japan has had the benefits of lead-free motoring for over 10 years, other EEC countries actually want to delay the introduction date until 1993.

The Tories will no doubt argue that their hands are tied by the EEC. This can easily be disproved because amazingly enough, the EEC actually allows its member countries to change existing cars to unleaded petrol if and when they desire. Thatcher is always whining about how much the Tories care. If they did care – even a little bit – then they would have, at the very least, introduced financial incentives to the motor industry and the public so that they would change existing vehicles to unleaded petrol.

It is interesting to compare Britain's efforts with developments in the USA. The American establishment has never cared about its people either, but at least lead-free petrol has been mandatory in new cars since 1975. In the first four years lead levels in US citizens fell by almost 40 per-cent. An American study also revealed that the technological costs of phasing out all lead additives were far outweighed by the savings on health and public welfare benefits. By 1990 leaded petrol will represent less than 1 per-cent of the US market. By the same date, providing that our establishment and the EEC are feeling compassionate towards us, our sales of unleaded petrol will represent perhaps 1 per-cent of the market.

If the will and the determination were there, as it would be if the NF were in the driving seat, the change could start tomorrow. It's about time that the air was cleared on this important issue.

No FoE of ours



IN 1981, Bristol council stopped seperate waste paper collections. This traditional form of environmental enterprise was immediately taken up by Avon Friends of the Earth. Now the collection project employs thirty seven people with the help of MSC grants.

Altogether Avon FoE employ a total of eighty-eight people in various collection and recycling projects, and last year collected about 1500 tons of waste paper. Although this is an enormous amount, it is only one per-cent of the potential total in Avon, is a very important way of helping to save our ancient woodlands. The potential for creating jobs is also enormous. From collecting and recycling just one per-cent of the potential amount of waste paper in Avon, last year Avon FoE had a turnover of nearly £500,000.

AFRIKANER REALITIES

BY MARK ALDER

AFRIKANERS are unlike any other White community in Africa. Their claim to be a distinct but indigenous nation of that continent (Afrikaner literally means African) is based on the fact that their ancestors first settled at the southern tip of Africa 300 years ago where they evolved over the centuries a culture and historical experience totally different from their European cousins. The international media likes to portray the Afrikaners as a rich parasitical elite who have stolen the inheritance of the Black race. It is therefore surprising to see Peter Godwin, in a Sunday Times article (12/1/86) making some attempt to present a more realistic analysis of the Afrikaner nation.

Militant Afrikaner Nationalists, members of the Herstigte National Party, demonstrate for Africaner Rights in South Africa.

There are about 2.8m Afrikaners, approximately two-thirds of the White population of the Republic of South Africa. Their traditional support for the National Party, which has ruled the Republic without interruption since 1948, has waned in the wake of the present government's declaration of support for a unified, multi-racial South African State.

In a South Africa presently run on behalf of Capitalism more than 30,000 Whites are unemployed and many more White families are dependent on soup kitchens and other help from their neighbours to eke out an increasingly bleak existence. A typical example are the Fouries, Stephanus and Susarah. "Their tiny four room house has much in common with millions of other box houses in the Black townships. But the Fouries are poor White Afrikaners". Stephanus earns £60 working as a cleaner in government buildings, £14 of which must be spent on the rent. Having been unable to afford the electricity bill they have been using candles for three months and heat water over a fire in the yard. Yet despite the failure of the present Capitalist system to serve Afrikaners like the Fouries, they do not want to live in a multi-racial South Africa. Of the other races Stephanus told Godwin "Someone will have to put up a wall against them".

SOURCE OF PRIDE

Like ordinary people everywhere, the mass of Afrikaners have one certain source of pride – their heritage and culture. Their nation's history has taught them the universally applicable lesson that the integration of different cultural groups within the same society ultimately destroys the all important uniqueness of each culture involved. The founders of the Afrikaner nation arrived at the tip of Southern Africa in the seventeenth century when the Bantu tribes were just beginning to expand into what is now South Africa, exterminating the native bushmen as they went. When the British annexed the Cape in the early nineteenth century most Afrikaners found the prospect of British rule intolerable and set off into the interior to found the independent Afrikaner republics of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. It was at this time that the Afrikaners first came into conflict with the negro tribes moving south, but they were able to establish mutually agreed boundaries between their respective territories. This independent Afrikaner nation was only destroyed by the military might of the British Empire in a war concluded in 1902 (which together with an earlier conflict in which the British were defeated are understandably remembered by the Afrikaners as the 'war of freedom').

It is this traditional ideal of a free Afrikaner nation which motivated the original vision of Apartheid. Instead the entrenched interests who have gained wealth, jobs and prestige from administering the prevailing system (which is nothing more than a codified form of American style racial segregation) have prevented the achievement of real racial separation and created the conditions for the inevitable eruption of racial conflict. Today the threat to the eventual creation of a distinct Afrikaner nation state is heightened by the machinations of international Capitalism which seeks the continuation of a unitary multi-racial state where it can exploit both White and Black labour. The visionaries of true Apartheid failed to realise that Capitalism is a rival system hostile to all nationalist aspirations.

Godwin interviewed two 'verligte' (liberal) Afrikaners who were willing to deny the practicality of a separate Afrikaner nation-state. Piet Cillie, editor of the Cape newspaper Die Burger, says that while he once believed "If you can't get on – separate. That will no longer do. There has to be a new order if Afrikanerdom is to survive." Of course what this new order should be and how a distinct Afrikaner nation can continue to exist in a multi-ethnic state is not explained. What has motivated Cillie to abandon his nation is tacitly identified by Godwin's comment "The undoing of classic apartheid doctrine says Cillie . . . . was its denial of the inexorable intergrating force of economics". In other words personal profit takes precedence over the national aspirations of the Afrikaner people.

VOLTE–FACE

Another former advocate of Apartheid who has performed a volte-face is Beyers Naude, an official of the Dutch Reform Church. He argues the Bible cannot justify Apartheid, without himself explaining where that book demands the forceable integration of different ethnic groups. His change of mind was also due to personal experience of the stark conditions and despair in the Black townships of the Republic. Yet when Naude says "for the first time I was confronted with what Apartheid was actually doing to other human beings", he is actually condemning the capitalist exploitation of Blacks which is also perpetrated against Afrikaners like Stephanus Fourie, and which is hostile to the achievement of true Apartheid. Naude, the 'moral' opponent of Apartheid, seems unperturbed that the Botha government is ignoring the wishes of the Afrikaner nation in trying to irretrievably trap them in a multi-racial state when he says "How does a party . . . . make an about turn while trying to convince the voters that it is not retreating".

'HENSOPPERS'

The few Afrikaners who deny their nation the right to self determination are referred to by the majority as 'hensoppers' (hands uppers), like the Afrikaners who bowed to British imperial rule. Godwin does not deny that most Afrikaners want a separate nation state he simply prefers to dismiss their vision without explanation. Thus when Carel Boshoff of the 'Volkswag' (People's Guard) organisation condemns the concept of a multi-racial Republic as "a colonial idea" Godwin finds this comment worthy of no further analysis.

Godwin's article is a relatively isolated attempt by a member of the Establishment media to represent something of the reality of the Afrikaner position. Though clearly a captive to the illusory promises of multi-racialism, Godwin has allowed some of the Afrikaners he interviewed to demonstrate the morality of their support for real separate development. The majority of Afrikaners simply want, in the words of Eugene Terre Blanche (of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement), the reconstitution of a separate Afrikaner state where "we can survive as an independent nation with its own culture and government". Let those who exclaim their support for Black national self determination explain the morality of their opposition to the White nation of Africa having the same right.

THE LUNATICS IN OUR MIDST

A SPECIAL REPORT BY NF CHAIRMAN MARTIN WINGFIELD

DECEMBER 12 was the day Joe Pearce was sent to prison for telling the British people the truth.

Since that day the National Front has been conducting a nationwide campaign to make the British people aware of what is happening in their so-called free and democratic society.

It is a slow and difficult process. So many avenues that lead to gaining publicity are closed to the National Front, so the party has to bring Joe's plight to the attention of the British people by means of leafletting, postering, writing letters and graffiti. Painting 'Free Joe Pearce' on a wall in a town centre might be against the law, but whan a young family man is spending 12 months in prison for telling the truth about coloured immigration and every newspaper, television company and radio station in the country refuses to take up his case, the message, some how, has to be got over to the British people.

PUBLICITY

Some individuals believe they can get publicity for Joe by short-cut methods. There is a group of such individuals in Kent. They called themselves 'The December 12th Group' and yes, they have got publicity for Joe Pearce. This handful of individuals from Kent have got publicity that indirectly associates a young man with one of the finest political brains in the country with guns, bombs and terrorism.

These individuals went up on the downs and posed in balaclavas and combat jackets, waving guns in the air while another of their number took photographs. They sent the pictures to local papers in Kent saying that they were a paramilitary group bent on freeing Joe Pearce. This jape got front page coverage for 'The December 12th Group'.

But not satisfied with that the group decided to send out imitation bombs to the Kent newspapers. The purpose of this was unclear but it again achieved front page publicity for Joe Pearce.

"The December 12th Group" appear to have found a short-cut to gaining publicity. But what did the publicity they gain achieve? The list is quite impressive!

ARRESTED

*A senior Kent NF official was arrested and all the NF membership files and correspondence for the county was siezed. He has since been released without charges being made but the National Front property is still in the hands of the police no doubt being scrutinised by Special Branch.

*The publicity has substantially discredited the National Front in Kent.

*One leading Kent member was given an ultimatum by his business partner who thought the NF was involved in para-military activities, leave the NF or our business is dissolved.

*Kent Branch Organisers report a drop in support with membership inquiries saying "I agree with the policies of the National Front but I don't want anything to do with this terrorist rubbish."

National Front Press Spokesman for Kent and Medway Organiser, Sid Campbell summed up the feeling of many of his members, "Year of hard work in Kent have been jeopardised by the antics of these cranks."

It is not only Kent members of the National Front who have suffered. Joe Pearce and his family have been directly affected by this short-cut to get publicity for his case. Authorities at Stamford Hill have stopped all Joe's privileges and curtailed what little freedom he has within that prison fearing that an attempt might be made to break him out. Due to the publicity all the black inmates are now aware who Joe Pearce is, which means that again, for his own safety, Joe is kept locked up for hours on end. It was a distraught Mrs. Gina Pearce who told NF members at a Barking meeting that her husband was depressed and suffering directly because of the adverse publicity in Kent.

There is a possibility that The December 12th Group could be opponents of the NF bent on sabotaging the Front's May election campaign in Kent. If so they have done a good job. It is more probable however that the individuals are people who are sympathetic to the NF and in their warped minds think they are helping Joe's case.

There are no short-cuts or easy options in the battle to right what is wrong in Britain today. It is very easy to dress-up, go onto the downs, pose for photos, and send them to a newspaper. You don't need to make any sacrifices to do that.

To sell National Front publications and give out leaflets supporting Joe Pearce in towns with high immigrant populations takes courage. Real National Front members and supporters are very brave individuals facing possible danger every time they venture out as representatives of our party.

RESPONSIBILITY

National Front members have a great responsibility. We are the last defenders of the British Identity. An identity that has evolved over thousands of years but is now being threatened by the coloured immigration policies of successive governments over the last 40 years. The history of our nations recalls the millions of our fellow countrymen who through the ages sacrificed their lives to defend that identity. Now it is left to the National Front. What a responsibility.

There are enough very evil people lined up to oppose the National Front in our crusade. We are going to need every ounce of courage, steadfastness and guile to meet the political struggles ahead. Our hands are going to be full dealing with the enemy without having to step back into our own ranks and deal with the stupidity of so-called supporters.

1986 has all the makings of a great year for the National Front. Let's make a real effort also to make it the year the National Front comes of age and starts acting like Britain's only political party dedicated to defending the British Identity.

1066 - The Year Saxon England Died

HERITAGE is a regular series in NT which examines Britain's social and cultural background. This article was written by Paul Comben.

ALTHOUGH the annals of military history are filled with battles which were destined to have a great influence on the fortunes of nations and peoples, there are probably very few that can match the historical importance of the Battle of Hastings. During the course of just one bloody day, October 14th 1066, Saxon England lost not only its king and an army, but also, as a consequence, much of its cultural identity. As the Norman knights rode over the stricken body of Harold Goodwinson in the half-light of that Autumn evening so many years ago, the England of Bede, Alfred the Great and Edward the Confessor fell also, and a new power and identity began to exert its influence over the land.

That Saxon England fell so relatively easily into the hands of William the Conquerer is made all the more surprising considering that the hardy Saxons had tasted invasion and defeat before, but had eventually emerged victorious over their foes. Alfred the Great had himself suffered years of humiliation at the hands of the Vikings before defeating them and bringing unity to the kingdom, whilst just a matter of days before Hastings, Harold defeated the last of the great Viking kings, Harald Hardradi, at the Battle of Stamford Bridge. Considering this problem, it might be fair to say that the unity of Saxon England – or at least most of it – was its greatest weakness as well as one of its greatest strengths, for it meant that with the death of the king and the rest of his male family at Hastings, there was no other noble or warlord capable of leading the nation in further resistance.

OBSESSED

As for Harold's opponent, William, Duke of Normandy, he was a man obsessed with the desire to rule the "green and pleasant land" across the Channel, a land he had visited in the past and fallen in love with. Ironically enough, both he and the soldiers he led were close relatives of the very Viking invaders the Saxons had fought for centuries past. Their name, "Norman", is merely a derivation of "Northman", the warrior Viking kindred of Scandinavia. It is therefore quite wrong to think of the Normans as French, as most schoolchildren seem to believe, for they were merely Vikings who had settled a bit further south than most. A good example of their Viking links can be seen in the Bayeux Tapestry, which shows the Norman invaders sailing to England in ships not at all different from those used by their forefathers in their questing voyages in search of adventure, plunder and women.

The Norman fleet must certainly have been an impressive sight as it approached the English coast late in the September of 1066. It consisted of some five hundred ships carrying an army of about seven thousand men. Their landing was unoppossed, because Harold's army was still in the north of England dealing with William's Viking allies. However, upon hearing of the invasion – on the very evening after Stamford Bridge – he immediately issued orders for his army to march south. Ahead of his soldiers went mounted messengers with orders that all the southern nobles and their peasant levies – "The Fyrd", literally "The Feared" – were to gather at the hoary apple tree, which was apparently a well-known landmark on the road from London to Hastings, near where the Normans landed.

SAXON KING

So it was that a truly Saxon king led a truly Saxon army into battle for the last time. They stood atop of Senlac Hill, eight or ten deep, with a thousand bright red and yellow shields arrayed with their bearers in the front rank to form the Saxon shield-wall. In the centre of Harold's line were his own men, the Huscarles, who had rammed their large kite-shaped shields into the ground so as to be able to wield their awesome double-handed axes, each with a shaft some five feet long. Amidst the Huscarles stood the king himself, and with him the great Dragon Banner of Wessex, and his own standard, "The Fighting Man".

"OUT"

The battle began some time early in the morning of October 14th 1066. The first Norman assault was aimed at Harold's centre, with armed Norman clerics offering up prayers for victory as they advanced. They were met, however, by Saxon roars of "Out!", and then with a deluge of spears, arrows, hand-axes, stones and weighted sticks. As the Normans closed on the Saxon line, they found to their dismay that they could make no impression on the shieldwall, which buckled and swayed, but then stood firm. Beneath their king's banners, the Huscarles were bringing down Norman knights and their mounts with single blows of their axes, and Harold himself shouted out encouragement to his warriors with cries of "Holy Rood!" Both Norman and Saxon chroniclers report Harold moving up and down his line, wherever danger threatened, bringing the Wessex Dragon with him, and calming the less well trained Fyrd if panic arose.

After several further assaults had met the same fate as the first, a state of confusion and anxiety started to spread through the Norman ranks, and some of William's soldiers started to drift away from the field. It is probable that at this moment, Harold had his best chance for a victory. However, instead of ordering a general advance, the bulk of his army remained rooted to their position on Senlac Hill, while a portion of the ill-disciplined Fyrd charged after the Normans. William was therefore given a chance to rally his mounted troops, and these turned onto the unsupported Fyrd and cut them down almost to a man. Several further feints by the Normans succeeded in luring more of the Fyrd from the shield-wall, and by late afternoon, the remaining Saxon troops were gathered in a tight circle around the king and the twin banners.

SUPREME EFFORT

It was now that William realised that the time for a supreme effort had come, for if the remnants of the Saxon force were able to hold on until nightfall, darkness would allow them to slip away into the surrounding woods, leaving William without a decisive victory. A series of furious Norman attacks followed, their efforts now aided by the Norman archers who were no longer being bothered by Saxon missiles. Little by little the Saxon position was eaten away, and not long before nightfall, Harold was struck in the eye by a Norman arrow, and his body then hacked to pieces by Norman knights before the Huscarles could close ranks around it. With their king dead, the remaining Fyrd slipped away into the woods, leaving the few hundred remaining Huscarles to die where they stood, defending the standards of the king until the last of them had been cut down.

VICTORY

William therefore gained his victory, but for military and political reasons, he refrained from entering London until Christmas Day 1066. The kingdom he inherited was to suffer much from Norman excesses in the years after Hastings, and the mutual distrust and hatred of both conquerors and conquered for each other did not die down for centuries. Eventually however, time acted as the great healer, and the combination of Saxon ruggedness and Norman discipline was to create a powerful nation and fighting force when the distant descendants of the Hastings warriors — Norman and Saxon — returned across the Channel to share in the glory of Crecy, Poitiers and Agincourt.

Today the field of Hastings is sheltered behind the walls of a massive 14th century gatehouse and abbey built by Benedictine monks. From the abbey terrace one can still see the steep slopes of Senlac Hill, with the abbey terrace itself following the line held by the Saxons for most of the day. A stone marks the place where Harold fell, and an impressive model of the battlefield can be seen within the walls of the gatehouse.

* *

The battlefield and ruins are open for most of the year — best to check dates — and lie just south of the town of Battle, about fifty miles south of London by car and by direct line from B.R. Charing Cross.

Support Our Struggle

THE NATIONAL FRONT is the only serious political movement which is fighting for Britain. We hold a vision of the future for our country where all Britons can be proud of their communities, proud of their freedom, proud of their traditions, proud of their achievements and proud of their country, where we can respect other peoples living in their own lands and where they, in turn, respect us.

To turn this vision into reality is a task which requires the greatest possible dedication from all our members and supporters. In order to convince more people of the ability of the National Front to carry out this transformation we must build a mighty political movement. One of the most basic requirements for this to happen is a steady reliable source of income. While we are making tremendous strides to increase our income from other sources, we still need regular donations. Of particular importance is the Militants' Levy.

Just £5.00 per month from a number of individuals enables us to build a solid financial base and to plan ahead. If you really believe in our Cause, then this is an absolute must. In return we will send you a Chairman's Bulletin every two months detailing recent developments within the NF, what progress we are making and what publicity we are receiving.

To join this scheme, just send us a minimum of £5.00 and we will send you your first Chairman's Bulletin and a donation card. Please do it today!

I enclose my first donation for the Militants' Levy. (£5.00 min.)

IMPROVEMENT

Dear Editor,

A great improvement, excellent features and a much wider scope. Those are just some of the personal opinions expressed by people in this part of Devon whom during the past 3 months have been re-introduced to Nationalism Today and other National Front publications. Your combined efforts to improve these publications have been achieved to the point where they are the best of their type in circulation today.

Yours sincerely,

Ken Libby,
Plymouth.

COMMENTS

Dear Nationalism Today,

I would like to make a few points on Tom Acton's article in NT No. 36, in which he proposed that National Front News be transformed into a mass-circulation free giveaway newspaper.

Firstly door-to-door sales are, in my opinion, a major part of the NF's 'Target Ward' strategy – making contact with people all over the ward. By going to their homes to sell them a newspaper we get to know of local problems and local issues. With no paper to sell the extremely important human contact with the public will be gone.

Secondly I had assumed the long-term aim for National Front News was the creation of a daily Nationalist newspaper, which would have to be sold to the public. Would greater frequency of production not be more useful politically than a greater, but less regular, circulation?

Yours sincerely,

Roland Andrews,
Scunthorpe.

WELFARE

Dear Nationalism Today,

May I take this opportunity to thank all those individuals and NF units who have donated to the Nationalist Welfare Association.

As you may be aware, the National Front has many members behind bars – simply for defending our Race and Nation. Others have been heavily fined for opposing the enemies of Britain, like those arrested during the NF's anti-IRA demo in early February.

Where our members are jailed, the NWA provides financial help for their families. Where NF members are fined, we help pay part of their fine.

However, the amount of financial help the NWA can afford to give obviously depends on how much the NWA has itself. Therefore, if Patriots can afford to send the NWA a donation, please send them to: The Treasurer, NWA, P.O. Box 41, Norwich, Norfolk, NR3 2AH. (Please make out all Cheques/P.O's to "NWA") All donations – large or small – are gratefully appreciated. All donations will be acknowledged.

Another way in which Patriots can help the NWA is to write to the following Nationalist political prisoners:

L25819 Pearce, Hut Cells, HMP Stanford Hill, Church Road, Eastchurch, Sheerness, Kent, ME12 4AA.

274 Dessie Clarke, Deal House, HM. YC Centre, Western Heights, Dover, Kent CT17 9DR.

L25818 Ian Stuart Donaldson, HMP Wayland, Griston, Thetford, Norfolk, IP25 6RL.

D99206 Peter Collins, Feltham YCC, Bedfont Road, Feltham, Middlesex.

Once again, I'd like to remind Patriots that the NWA is funded solely by donations. We can only afford to pay out what we get in. Help the NWA support Nationalist prisoners. Donate today!

Yours,

John Field,
Treasurer, NWA.

STAR LETTER

Each month Nationalism Today publishes the best letter written in support of the National Front, published in the local press. The winner receives a £5 Nationalist Books voucher.

This month's joint winners are J. Lynch and G. Williamson, both from Havering Branch of the NF, who succeeded in getting two letters simultaneously published in support of the party in the Havering Post.

Send your published letters to: Nationalism Today, P.O. Box 41, Norwich, Norfolk, NR3 2AH.

Freedom in the Front line

IT WOULD be interesting to know what gives Cllr Whitworth the moral right to operate political censorship in opposing the display of National Front literature in local libraries.

The original Labour Party used to complain, quite rightly, of the lack of free speech and political rights allowed to the Labour Movement by the establishment.

Now that modern day Socialists are a party of the establishment they show themselves as true hypocrites by being in the forefront of limiting political expression.

Local Conservatives are little better as it is their council which operates a policy of political censorship.

We hear a great deal of weasel words from politicians about democracy but surely the proof of the pudding is in the eating.

G. Williamson,
Northwood Avenue, Elm Park.

IT came as no surprise when Havering councillors from both sides of the political spectrum opposed displaying copies of Nationalism Today in the borough libraries.

It is my belief that their sole reason for doing so was one of fear. Fear that if the truth of what is happening to this country became widely known then their support would crumble overnight.

Nationalism Today — while not seeking to offend anyone — does not shrink away from the truth and therefore our opponents will go to any length to prevent our message from being heard. We would like to say just one thing to the members of Havering Council ... the truth will prevail.

Chairman Havering National Front.

AH SO, flanks to most glacious inflatation of your Plime Minister, Margaret Flatcher, Japanese now control all Bleetish car industry. We have Bleetish Reyland, we have Pauxhall and Flords, and very soon we have Walls Woyce.

Under Japanese control, there will be only two companies – there will be the Tenko Tlucks Company, and Nippon-Banzai car assembly prant, which will assemble parts of car imported from Japan. We know that Bleetish workers will obey new system, because new system will have no unions except union reckonised by company – namely, Union of Menial and Dishonourable Workers.

All workers must wear company loonifiorm, and runchblakes will consist of one bowl of lice to be eaten in two minutes. To miss work will mean clastlation, and offlender will known as mislable and worthless cur.

Finally, all workers will gather flirst fling in the morning to sing company song to the tlune "My Old Man's a Dlustman".

O, I am a British worker
I have no time for naps
Since someone cut me wages
And sold me to the Japs
I work for fourteen hours
But when my work is done
I know I've done my service
To help the Rising Sun.

Yes, I am a British worker
I make the part that clips
Between the hose and fanbelt
That helps to drive the Nips
And though I'm quite exhausted
When comes the end of day
I'm always always ready
To take a cut in pay.

RED ACTION MAN

YES, he's in your shops now, the super delux bendy-wendy Red Action Man. Only Red Action Man comes with two-tone teeth, detachable chest wig, and optional bad breath. Only Red Action Man can save Britain's child muggers, rapists, bombers and baby killers from the fiendish Ratman, whose secret lair is buried deep in a Croydon basement, and whose terrifying Ratmobile hurries through London's crime-ridden streets in search of our hero and his friend, "Greasy" Jake Gerwirtz.

Now you can have Red Action Man take on the enemies of the Socialist Internationale. You can watch as he nearly destroys an NF march with one blast of his Demon Wind. You can thrill to the sounds of his radical rhetoric by pulling his little thing and hearing him come out with such phrases as: "Me an' the Sambos understand each other, don't we John-John?", "F- - - - - g NF make me wanna puke" and "Trotsky was a tastey geezer."

Your Red Action Man comes to you dressed in Bruce Springsteen denims, bullet-belt and leak-proof nappy. Additional items include Red Action's flabby feminist co-heropherson, Fran Edan, who disguises her superhuman powers by appearing as an ugly old cow, and "Greasy Jake" himself, who appears only in national newspapers, local newspapers, radio shows and the like as a stand-in for his close relative, the Jedi knight Yoda Cohen.

So, mums and dads, give the kiddies something they will just love to squash, pound, kick and finally tear to shreds – a Red Action Man dolly, or one of his friends. On sale at most toyshops, or in case of difficulty write to:

Romance ~ U.S.A. Style!

ANYONE who thinks the Age of Romance is over in degenerate materialist America should think again. A study on the 'sub-culture of the Singles Bar' reported in the journal American Speech shows that Americans are a deeply romantic people only interested in meaningful, caring relationships.

And if you believe that you'll believe anything.

Professor Thomas Murray who made the study listed three thousand opening lines used in Missouri singles bars, and divided them into three categories – advertisements, questions and compliments.

Advertisements were often innocuous – 'My name is . . .', being the most popular. However some preferred lines like 'I'm a retread' (i.e. divorced) or 'My bunny really hops' (Whatever that means).

Questions were often equally innocuous, such as 'What's your name?' However, 53 Americans, obviously starry-eyed romantics all, started conversations with the immortal words 'Wanna f . . . ?' Altogether there were 377 variants on that theme, including 'Wanna saddle up?' and 'Wanna honk my horn?' Who says Americans have no imagination?

Compliments were only made by 'wimps' apparently, since it carries the unspoken message 'I am desperate', and the true American swinging single is supposed to always be cool, calm and in control.

If however you are a male wimp and you want to pick up American women then Rat Chat gives you the results of Prof. Murray's researches into successful compliments. These are as follows: 1. You got a great ass. 2. You got great hair, or 3. Best knockers I've seen all night. The Black Rat says he would never stoop to using such corny lines, but female readers can nibble his cheese any time!

DHSS – Collapse on the Way

SUE ROBINSON is a Nationalist Trades Unionist, working for the Department of Health and Social Security Security in London.

She sends us this report of the decline of the DHSS under Thatcherism. If makes disturbing reading ro all those concerned with the well-being of the less-fortunate within our society.

IT WILL NOT be too long before the Welfare State, as we know it, vanishes. Already two symptoms can be seen: 'simplification' of the rules, and staff cuts. The result is already known to many of our members: great delays in payment, lost files, telephone calls where it takes you an hour to get past the switchboard.

It is getting worse, the process is acclerating visibly. An accurate indicator of the problem is what is called 'annual staff turnover'. This simply means the number of staff who leave and have to be replaced over a yearly period. In some offices this adds up to three or four out of ten staff who will leave and be replaced in one year; in other offices the rate is five out of ten. In a few offices it is seven or eight out of ten! What this means to you the claimant is that you are dealing with staff who are not properly trained, and who are under pressure to get more and more work done.

VIOLENCE

The 'flexi-time' system allows staff to do more hours in a day than is necessary, so that they then take a day or two off to let their time drop down. Overtime is not worked in most DHSS offices. But the result of taking a day off is that you come back to a desk overflowing with work; there is simply no-one to cover your desk while you are away. Violence at the local offices is a particularly bad problem, and like the other problems it is worsening. It usually takes the form of torrents of abuse and the regular smashing of windows, but sometimes it gets to physical injury. Recently an office maintenance manager went to inspect the 'customer' side of the security screens, only to be kicked by a frustrated claiment!

Pay is another bad aspect of Civil Service life. The unions' efforts to improve pay have been monotonously unsuccessful over the years, with the result that private sector pay is now very much higher than rates for comparative Civil Service jobs.

All of this has an expected effect: Civil Service employees are leaving in large numbers. What's more, it is becoming increasingly difficult for replacements to be found. Here is a breakdown from a typical London DHSS office – by no means the worst one!

On the Contributory Benefits side things seem okay. The 'complement' figures (the number of staff the office is allowed to have) are the same as the 'operational' figures (the number of staff we actually have). But these are the bare bones. They do not include 'spare' people to cover others off sick or on leave. It only takes three people to be on leave and two or three to go sick for the section to be thrown into absolute turmoil.

The very old and the very young – they have the most to fear from the collapse of welfare services in this country.

So much for the good figures. Now the bad ones. The Supplementary Benefits section as a whole in the office I am referring to are thirteen clerical officers under complement. The clerical officers are the ones who work out and pay the amounts due, and who are most frequently screamed at by angry claimants on the counter. But that's not all. Supp. Ben. section are seven executive officers under complement. This grade is the lowest level of management. A large part of their job involves being screamed at too, as they try to explain why they have one clerical officer to deal with two phones and perhaps a hundred cases in one day. And bear in mind once again that this is thirteen COs and seven EOs below the bare bones figure; illness and leave have to be considered too to realise how bad things are.

The process of disintegration in DHSS, Department of Employment and other parts of the welfare state is obvious. Already the staff in many DHSS offices across London have walked out in protest about pay and conditions. Management's attitude is to pooh-pooh the idea of a breakdown, while at the same time tacitly accepting it and thinking up ways of delaying "The Day". One sign of this is the gradual simplifying of procedures. Some security checks are being officially abandoned now. There has been a quiet disregarding of valuable check rules for some time now, by over-worked staff who just can't be bothered to go through every detail of procedure. But official abandonment of cross-checking methods is an ominous sign, and a sign that 'they' know all too well what's up.

Another sign is the alteration of training procedures. Training centres are being shut down and training courses on set dates are being abandoned. Instead there are 'self-instruction' manuals – "self destruction" to the cynical – and courses are delayed until there is a set number of people waiting to go on one. The inevitable result is people working for months with only the most basic of training. As an added joy, there are few copies of the training books available. If there are a lot of people waiting to be 'self instructed' then they have to wait.

COLLAPSE

There are two reasons for the collapse of the welfare state. One is that the Thatcher government has nearly completed the work of squandering Great Britain's resources, and the cash is beginning to run out. She keeps her minions sweet with pay rises; but the money's got to come from somewhere. Accompanying this practical problem is the Tory idea of unlimited free enterprise, and the resultant notion that if something is not making a profit, then it goes out the window. Thatcher and her crew do not understand the concept of public enterprise.

They do not understand that health services, and benefits services do not, and cannot make profits. Nor can these things exist without a lot of money being put into them. Attempts to run things profitably are doomed to failure. A public service is not a factory or a supermarket, and bringing in experts from these fields to advise on the running of a public service – as has been done – is wasteful itself. The end result of Thatcher's policies is going to be no public service. Whether the DHSS, the DOE, the hospitals, and the Post Offices have all vanished by the time the Thatcher government is gone is a difficult question to answer. But it is certain that the collapse is coming. It will happen soon.

NEWS FROM JOE

JOE PEARCE, the Chairman of the National Front's Education and Training Department, has now served almost a quarter of the vicious 12 month sentence imposed on him for helping to produce Bulldog, the former YNF paper.

His wife Gina has been visiting Joe whenever she is allowed, ever since he was first imprisoned. "At first conditions were o.k., and Joe was as well as could be expected under the circumstances", she reported.

The situation has unfortunately changed for the worse, thanks to the unwanted efforts of the so-called "December 12th Group" which threatened terrorist actions unless Joe was released.

As a result the Prison authorities have stopped letting Joe out of the jail on work parties. "Joe is very disappointed about this", said Gina, "because it was the only chance he had to see the outside world and breathe free air."

Worse still, the publicity has meant that all of the Prison's large Black population now knows who Joe is, and has been wound-up to "get" him. As a result Joe is now locked up in solitary confinement almost 24 hours a day, as the authorities now cannot otherwise guarantee his safety.

Gina concluded by asking all NT readers to show their moral support for Joe at this difficult time for him. "It helps Joe tremendously knowing that so many people support his stand. Please write as many letters of support to him as you can. His address is –

NT Appeal News

IN THE LAST issue of Nationalism Today we announced the successful conclusion to our appeal for funds to raise money to publish a series of Policy broadsheets commencing with one on Ulster.

Since then it has been decided to slightly alter the format of the first publication. Instead of a seperate broadsheet the NF will publish a special supplement to NF News, which will be extended to TEN pages. We estimate that this way the circulation will be at least 400% higher than that of a seperate publication.

Don't miss this special publication – ring the NF Admin. Office (0603 628221) for details of how to obtain supplies.

ULSTER MUST FIGHT!

EVENTS IN ULSTER seem certain to be cataclysmic and traumatic in 1986. Many British Nationalists in the NF are asking "What can the NF do to help the Loyalist cause? What will be our role in Ulster?"

In 'The Crisis in Ulster' respected Belfast writer David Kerr analyses the current political scene in Ulster, and explains why he feels that Ulster must set up an independent state.

In 'The NF Solution' NF Deputy Chairman, Nick Griffin, explains why the NF now calls on Ulster to declare U.D.I. He also outlines the role the NF will play in the coming events.

Unpredictable though events in Northern Ireland are, one thing is certain: Ulster must fight, as she has always fought, to survive; and her fellow Briton's on the land must join her struggle, for one day the people on the mainland will have to fight to survive also, and they will then need Ulster's help . . . .

The Crisis in Ulster

DAVID KERR

Militant Loyalists take to the streets of Belfast.

answerable to the Ulster electorate. They have always refused to organise or fight elections in the province. (The only British party to do both is of course the National Front). Ulster is now governed by an unelected colonial junta which calls itself the 'Intergovernmental Conference'.

The British Secretary of State for Northern Ireland still nominally wields the powers of government which are now 'guided' by the Intergovernmental Conference – a secret body which is jointly chaired by the Secretary of State and the Eire Foreign Minister.

LOYALIST RESISTANCE

Ulster can never be the same again. Loyalists are beginning to realise that they have not been treated equally with their fellow Britons in England, Scotland and Wales. Even the isolated whites in black inner cities have still more security than Border loyalists. Now that Ulster is governed by an unelected junta many loyalists are reassessing their loyalties. The Tories have betrayed Ulster to the republican enemy, Westminster endorsed their treachery and the Queen didn't lift a finger to help her devoted subjects.

THE ALTERNATIVE

The N.F. Solution

NICK GRIFFIN

WHEN THE STORY of the British National Revolution is written, it is certain that events in Northern Ireland will be seen as crucial in our rise to power. And though it is difficult to see things in their true perspective when you are living through them day by day, it is possible, perhaps even likely, that these crucial events will occur in Ulster over the next few months.

No-one will deny that the treasonable Anglo-Irish agreement has brought matters to a head, or that the Establishment's contemptuous reaction to the united opposition to it of a million Loyalists is piling boxes of explosive around the long-burning fuse of their anger, frustration and fear. The people of Ulster have finally been brought to the brink of an open uprising – not against the few hundred Republican terrorists who have been allowed to wreck their lives, but against the British Establishment which has permitted them to do so and embarked on a shameless policy of treason and betrayal. An ever-increasing number of Ulstermen are being forced to the same conclusion as the National Front's 1985 A.G.M., which passed a policy motion declaring the Party's belief that "A Unilateral Declaration of Independence from the British government is the only way in which they can maintain their freedom and identity as part of the British family of Nations."

LOYALIST TRADITION

There is a significant Loyalist tradition calling for full autonomy for Ulster. In 1912, Carson made preparations for the establishment of a "provisional government of Ulster", but the First European Brothers' War intervened and the flower of the UVF went off to die in the mud of Flanders for the same pack of political jackals they had set out to defy.

More recently, W.F. McCow, Speaker of the Ulster House of Commons until 1965, used the Unionist newsheet to advocate Dominion status and demand that "Ulster should get full and complete independent majority so wish." If they are lucky that gives them 25 years, then the certainty of rule from Dublin as a result of immigration from Eire and the higher Catholic/Republican birthrate.

ROTTEN STATE

Does this constitute a call to "break up the United Kingdom"? Well, it certainly would involve breaking the hold of the Establishment over part of Britain. Yes, it would begin the break-up of the System's "United Kingdom", but what else is our aim, if not the destruction of this rotten State – the State that has forced on us mass immigration, an unjust and brutal economic system and deadly foreign military occupation? If this State, this "United Multi-Racial Sewer" survives, then our Race and Nations will die. It must be destroyed.

The important thing is that Ulster after UDI will still be "British" in terms of culture and identity. Indeed, since loyalty to the present System will lead inevitably to betrayal and defeat, a UDI from the British State is paradoxically the only way in which Ulster can preserve for ever its position as part of the British Family of Nations. UDI will not break the unity of the British peoples, for nationality is not made by passports and government decrees but by race and tradition. Belonging to a nation is an affair of the heart, not a matter of bits of paper and the whining of politicians.

Since our aim, then, is the overthrow of the Establishment, we must seek a Revolution. And the situation in Ulster is fast becoming Revolutionary. If things develop as they easily could, and if we influence them as easily as we should, then our British Revolution will start in Ulster. We must look on the idea of an independent Ulster not as a breaking-up of Britain, but as the first liberated zone of our future Britain. For it will be free – free from U.S. bases, free from at least the worst of capitalist exploitation, free from mass immigration and free from
